Amendment No. 15: Restores subsection letter proposed by the House.

TRADE ACT—ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS

Amendment No. 16: Deletes appropriation of $4,588,000 proposed by the Senate for State administrative costs related to the Trade Act. The House resolution contained no funds for this purpose.

The conferees are concerned that some States will not have sufficient unexpended carryover funds from prior allotments under the Dislocated Workers Assistance Program to maintain ongoing levels of job retraining and support services in program year 1986. Therefore, the conferees direct that in reviewing applications submitted by States for discretionary funds the Secretary of Labor shall give first priority to those applications submitted by States with insufficient unexpended carryover funds from prior year obligations to maintain ongoing expenditure levels throughout program year 1986. This should provide the desired assistance to those States which have utilized funds provided in prior years while also maintaining the Secretary's responsibility under the Job Training Partnership Act to consider throughout the year proposals submitted by States for special projects that could otherwise not be financed. The Secretary shall report to the House and Senate Appropriations Committees on the amount of carryover funds which are available to each State under section 301(b) of the Act and if additional appropriations are necessary to maintain current program levels in all States.

FOSTER CARE—RATE OF OPERATIONS

Amendment No. 17: Inserts language propsoed by the Senate which has the effect of providing the current rate of spending for certain expired sections of Title IV-E of the Social Security Act relating to foster care and adoption assistance. The House resolution contained no similar provision.

Amendment No. 19: Deletes House language as proposed by the Senate. The House language reads as follows:

SEC. 105. In view of the financial crisis facing many farmers, resulting from embargoes and suspension of exports in 1973, 1974, 1975, and 1980, and failure to use the Commodity Credit Corporation for a loan program which led to a fair price from the user, the Secretary of Agriculture shall use his authority under existing law to provide for nonrecourse loans on basic agricultural commodities at such levels as will reflect a fair return to the farm producer above the cost of production, and to issue such regulations as will carry out this provision and as will provide for payment by the purchaser, rather than by appropriation, for basic commodities sold for domestic use and the Secretary of Agriculture shall issue such regulations as will enable producers of any basic agricultural commodity to produce the amount needed for domestic consumption, to maintain the pipeline, and to regain and retain by competitive sales our normal share of the world market.

The House provisions directed the Secretary to carry our existing law. The House receded to Senate position since the authority to the Secretary continues to exist.

Amendemnt No. 20: Deletes House language as proposed by the Senate. The House language reads as follows:

SEC. 106. Public Law 99-88 funded a study by the Department of Agriculture to determine the losses suffered by United States farm producers of agricultural products during the last decade as a result of embargoes on the sale of United States agricultural products and the failure to offer for sale in world markets commodities surplus to domestic needs at competitive prices, for use in determining what part of existing indebtedness of farmers should be canceled as a result of such foreign policy. Pending the completion of the study, the Secretary shall determine, on a case-by-case basis, which borrowers are unable to continue making payments of principal and interest due to embargoes or the failure to sell competitively in world trade and, thereby, qualify for an adjustment of principal and interest due to prevent bankruptcy of foreclosure, all as authorized by existing law.

Upon presentation of substantial evidence to the Secretary that a borrower qualifies, payment of principal and interest shall be suspended and the Secretary shall forego foreclosure of loans owed to the Federal Government, as authorized by law, for 12 months or until an adjustment is agreed upon. Other creditors shall be requested by the Secretary to postpone payments due on the same basis.

The House provision directed the Secretary to take action authorized by existing law. The House receded to the Senate position, since authority to do as the language directs continues to exist.

RUIDOSO AIRPORT

Amendment No. 21: Makes a technical correction to the authority included in Public Law 99-98 for the relocation of the Fort Stanton Experiment Station in order to make room for a new Ruidoso airport as proposed by the Senate.

SOIL CONSERVATION SERVICE

WATERSHED AND FLOOD PREVENTION OPERATIONS

EMERGENCY WATERSHED PROTECTION MEASURES

Amendment No. 22: Appropriates $40,000,000 for emergency assistance to repair watersheds that were damaged by Hurricane Juan and torrential rains this fall, as proposed by the Senate. The conference agreement also amends a U.S. Code citation to clarify that rehabilitation measures are funded.

The conferees agree that there is an urgent need for supplemental funds and that these funds should be used to (a) continue to remove debris from drains, streams, and structure openings to prevent further devastating floods and the resulting hazards to life and property; (b) restore the $5,000,000 emergency contingency fund; and (c) restore the $10,000,000 operating funds that have been redirected to provide immediate emergency assistance.

FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

Amendment No. 23: Provides an increase in the limitation on administrative expenses of $9,549,000 (from assessments collected from farm credit system banks) for fiscal year 1986 as proposed by the Senate. The conference agreement also provides that the Comptroller General or his duly authorized representatives shall have access to and the right to examine all books, documents, papers, records, or other recorded information within the possession or control of the Federal land banks and Federal land bank associations, Federal intermediate credit banks and production credit associations and banks for cooperatives.

EDA BALANCES NOT DISBURSED

Amendment No. 24: Inserts language proposed by the Senate concerning the use of obligated and undisbursed funds in New York, New York, amended to include the following: similar provisions for funds for

New Jersey, California, Alabama and Illinois; clarifying language concerning Red Rock Dam and Lake, Iowa; two grants totalling $8,500,000 for the Economic Development Administration; and $2,500,000 for the United States Information Agency to reimburse organizations for expenses related to international games for the handicapped. The House bill contained none of these provisions.

The conference agreement provides that obligated but undisbursed balances from the appropriations pursuant to the Local Public Works Capital Development and Investment Act of 1976 be made available to the locations and for the purposes designated in the Joint Resolution in the following amounts: (1) New York, New York, $14,100,000; (2) New Jersey, $1,069,861; (3) California, $431,012; in addition, the conferees intend that his contribution toward the South Gate project is in addition to, and not in any way in lieu of, other fiscal year 1986 EDA funds to be applied to this important project; (4) Alabama, $470,224; (5) Illinois, $819,650; the conferees intend that $400,000 will be for a grant to the Will County Local Development Company and the balance of these funds will be allocated to the Illinois and Michigan Canal Commission for the purpose of achieving the objectives set forth in establishing the Corridor, for improving economic conditions in the area, engendering long-term, sustainable economic development for the creation of permanent jobs, and to meet additional administrative demands created through the provision of these funds.

The conference agreement also includes language to facilitate activities related to an existing flood control project at Red Rock Dam and Lake, Iowa. When the Red Rock Project was established, some owners were forced to sell flowage easements and not given the opportunity to sell the land instead. This was not the policy on projects since that time. Flooding has been more frequent than anticipated and caused great loss to some owners. Selling land subject to such an easement is very difficult and it would be in the interest of both the government and the owners to purchase the remaining interest where owners desire to sell it. The appraisal of the interests in the real estate involved shall be in accordance with usual appraisal principles, recognizing the percentage of the total fair market value paid for the flowage easement rights presently owned by the United States.

The conference agreement also provides two grants for economic development assistance purposes: (1) Lexington County, South Carolina, and (2) Fort Worth Stockyards. In addition, the conferees direct that, within available funds, the Secretary of Commerce make payment as expeditiously as possible to the City of East Grand Forks, Minnesota, in connection with the City's application for assistance under title I of the Public Works and Economic Development Act as approved by the Economic Development Administration in September, 1983. This is a unique case in that the project qualifies under recently revised regulations concerning the relocation of grantees.

The conference agreement provides $2,500,000 to the United States Information Agency for reimbursement of expenses associated with the exchange of athletes, coaches and officials for international games for the handicapped held in the United States as authorized by Public Law 99-93. The agreement also provides that reimbursement for each organization conducting such games shall not exceed the total amount of necessary and reasonable expenses incurred by the organization in excess of donations and government services furnished. The organizations which are expected to apply for reimbursement and the anticipated amounts of their claims are: The XV International Games for the Deaf (not to exceed $1,977,600); the Fifth National Amputee Championships (not to exceed $250,000); the 1985 National Cerebral Palsy/Les Autres Games (not to exceed $330,000); the Ninth Annual National Championship for Blind Athletes (not to exceed $50,000); the National Wheelchair Athletic Association (not to exceed $40,000); National Handicapped Sports and Recreation Association (not to exceed $75,000); and the International Summer Special Olympic Games (not to exceed $25,000).

The conferees are agreed that the United States Information Agency shall carefully review each claim submitted under this program and provide reimbursement directly to claimants in accordance with the provisions of Public Law 99-93 and this conference agreement. Disbursements to the qualified claimants shall be made within 30 days after claims are submitted to the United States Information Agency. The conferees are further agreed that the United States Information Agency will submit a report to the House and Senate Appropriations Committees by April 1, 1986 concerning reimbursements made under this program and quarterly thereafter to the extent that any unobligated funds remain.

This language is the same as the Senate proposal except for the addition of the proviso. The House bill did not contain any provision on this matter.

The conference agreement is not intended to change the result in any case pending before the United States Parole Commission in which an initial hearing has been held.

COMPREHENSIVE CRIME COUNTER ACT

Amendment No. 27: Deletes Sec. 111 proposed by the Senate which would have amended the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 to permit the deputizing of local law enforcement officers for Federal investigations. The Senate had proposed an appropriation of $20,000,000 and language to remove the limitations on the number of staff and details to the Commission. The House bill did not contain any provision on this matter.

LEGAL SERVICES CORPORATION

Amendment No. 30: Inserts language which prohibits unobligated balances for the Legal Services Corporation which are carried over into fiscal year 1986 either by the Corporation or by any of its recipients from being expended unless such funds are expended pursuant to the restrictions and provisions of P.L. 99-180, except that such funds may be expended for continued representation of aliens commenced prior to January 1, 1983, or as approved by the Corporation. The Senate had proposed language which would have prohibited funds appropriated to the Legal Services Corporation and made available to grantees from being expended until such grantees had expended all funds carried over from previous fiscal years unless the failure to expend such funds had been approved by the Legal Services Corporation. The House bill contained no provision on this matter.

The conferees are agreed that attorneys in local legal services programs should not be put in the position of violating a judicial decree or the Code of Professional Responsibility because of the restrictions in the conference agreement. Therefore, the conferees have included a provision in the agreement which would permit the Corporation to waive these restrictions in order to preclude either of these situations.

SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

These funds are to be made available and expended only under the formula and other statutory provisions in effect during fiscal year 1985, without earmarkings or set-asides for specific projects. In addition, these funds are to be made available for all eligible projects and categories and shall not be limited to existing phased or segmented projects through the apportionment process or other means. The conferees expect to make the remaining $1,800,000,000 available in a subsequent appropriations Act at the earliest opportunity after enactment of the Clean Water Act amendments.

VETERANS ADMINISTRATION

Amendment No. 58: Inserts language proposed by the Senate transferring up to $8,000,000 to the general operating expenses appropriation from the medical care account, amended to change the section number and to delegate the authority to administer certain major construction projects to hospital directors. In providing that up to $8,000,000 of the 1986 medical care appropriation may be transferred to and merged with the 1986 general operating expenses appropriation, the conferees have received assurance from the Administrator of Veterans Affairs that the VA would reprogram to personnel compensation and benefits from other object classifications, such as equipment or maintenance and repair projects, such funds as may be necessary to support 193,941 full-time equivalent employees (FTEEs). This FTEE level does not include an estimated 589 in common services employment which must also be funded from the medical care account. Further, the VA has agreed that any funds reprogrammed would not reduce the number of patients treated, either in-house or by contract.

DELEGATION OF CERTAIN MAJOR CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS

In the conference report accompanying the 1982 HUD-Independent Agencies Appropriation Act (House Report 97-222), the Committee of Conference agreed that the nursing home care construction projects at Ann Arbor, Fresno, and Tampa would be administered by the hospital directors. The hospital directors were delegated authority to select the architect/engineer to design and/or supervise the construction of the projects. It was hoped that the experiment involving the three nursing home care units would result in more effectively and efficiently managed construction projects.

Pursuant to the conference report, the authority to administer nursing home care construction projects was delegated to the hospital directors. The projects were completed on or ahead of schedule and under budget. Further, there were very positive comments made by the hospital directors involved concerning the benefits derived from delegation during the construction process.

In fiscal year 1985, the Congress further expanded the delegation process to 21 construction projects. It was also understood that the VA had begun a modified delegation process with most other 1985 and 1986 projects. Recently, however, the conferees learned that the VA central office acted to withdraw the delegation program. The conferees do not agree with this decision. Therefore, the Committee of Conference has included language in the joint resolution to continue the delegation of selected projects.

It is the intent of the conferees that the Administrator of Veterans Affairs, in consultation with the Committees on Appropriations, choose 15 fiscal year 1985 and 10 fiscal year 1986 major construction projects to be delegated to the respective hospital directors. The terms and conditions of the delegation are to be those granted to the hospital directors for the nursing home care construction projects at Ann Arbor, Fresno, and Tampa. Those conditions are delineated as follows:

1. The hospital directors are authorized to delegate the authority further as appropriate.

2. The authority delegated includes, but is not limited to, full responsibility for supervising the site selection, design, and construction of the respective projects, and the making of monthly and final payments to contractors. The Office of Construction and the Department of Medicine and Surgery will provide advice to hospital directors regarding these projects when so requested by the hospital directors or their staffs.

3. The administration of these projects will be in compliance with all applicable statutes and regulations, including the National Fire Protection Code (which includes the National Electric Code), State codes where appropriate, and VA construction criteria. The projects should make an effort to comply with seismic standards.

4. The design will conform to the standards set out in VA handbook H 08-3, VA Construction Standards. The hospital directors may authorize deviations from such construction standards, but must advise the Administrator in writing prior to authorizing such actions.

Further, the VA is urged to delegate planning and design of all future major construction projects to the hospital directors. Delegation of the construction phase is to be determined by the Administrator. This process will insure that hospital construction projects will benefit from the views of the employees who must utilize the projects when completed. Above all, this process will be beneficial to veteran patients and provide for a more effective and efficient construction program.

The conference agreement prohibits such actions prior to August 15, 1986 instead of July 1, 1986 as proposed by the Senate. The House resolution included no similar provisions.

HEALTH EDUCATION ASSISTANCE LOANS (HEAL)

Amendment No. 103: Changes section number and inserts language proposed by the Senate making loan guarantees under the Health Education Assistance Loan program (HEAL) available without regard to any apportionments or other administrative limitations not specifically authorized under title VII. The House resolution included no similar provision of the Public Health Service Act.

MEDICARE DEMONSTRATIONS

Amendment No. 104: The conference agreement changes section number and modifies language proposed by the Senate to direct the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services to extend for one year only four municipal health service demonstration projects under Medicare. The Senate language directed that these grants be extended for three years. The House resolution included no similar provision. This agreement provides additional time for the authorizing committees to complete action on legislation currently in conference regarding the future of these projects.

CHILD CARE AND CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION

Amendment No. 105: Changes section number, deletes appropriations of $25,000,000 and modifies language proposed by the Senate relating to allocations to States for child care and child abuse prevention training. The House resolution contained no similar provision. The conferees view such training as a high priority and expect the States to use a portion of their 1986 allocation under Title XX of the Social Security Act for the training and retraining (including training in the prevention of child abuse in child care settings) of: providers of licensed or registered child care services; operators and staffs (including those receiving in-service training) of facilities where licensed or registered child care services are provided; State licensing and enforcement officials; and, parents.

MEDICARE HOSPITAL DEDUCTIBLE

Amendment No. 106: Deletes language proposed by the Senate. This language expressed the sense of the Senate regarding Medicare hospital deductible charges. The House resolution contained no similar provision.

SCIENCE AND MATHEMATICS EDUCATION

Amendment No. 107: Changes section number and inserts language proposed by the Senate making the 1986 appropriation for the Secretary of Education's discretionary fund under Title II of the Education for Economic Security Act immediately available upon enactment of the 1986 education appropriation bill, rather than July 1, 1986 as now provided in that bill. The House resolution contained no similar provision.

ELIGIBILITY FOR PELL GRANTS

Amendment No. 108: Changes section number and modifies language proposed by the Senate designed to assure that college students residing in areas designated as natural disaster areas may qualify for a Pell Grant for academic year 1985-86 without regard to the current 10 week limitation on the loss of income in determining expected family income. The conferees have modified the Senate language simply for the purpose of clarification.

The House resolution contained no similar provision.

Amendment No. 109: Changes section number.

LEGISLATIVE BRANCH MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Amendment No. 110: Conforms the section number and provides that the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center in the Treasury Department continue to provide basic training within available funds for the Capitol Police, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 111: Conforms the section number and appropriates $150,000 for the establishment and operation of the Biomedical Ethics Board and the Biomedical Ethics Advisory Committee, instead of $1,000,000 as proposed by the Senate. In providing these funds the conferees expect that the only activities that can be accomplished over the next several months will be the development of a work program together with budget estimates in sufficient detail to be examined by the Committees on Appropriations during the next appropriations hearings. Further, during those hearings the Committees on Appropriations will also explore the availability of options in carrying out the import objectives set out for the Board and Committee in the Public Health Services Act.

Amendment No. 112: Conforms the section number and amends the Legislative Reorganization Act to provide that the budget estimates of the Congressional Research Service will be submitted to the Librarian of Congress, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 114: Conforms the section number and amends the Federal Salary Act in accordance with the findings of the Department of Justice and the recommendations of the Quadrennial Commission, as proposed by the Senate.

BACK TAX LIABILITY—NAVY

Amendment No. 115: Inserts language as proposed by the Senate with an amendment which authorizes the Navy to enter into direct settlement with the State of Washington on back tax liabilities arising out of Federal construction and procurement projects in Washington State. Amendment also changes the Section number to 135.

BRIGADE ACTIVITY CENTER—NAVAL ACADEMY

Amendment No. 116: Deletes language added by the Senate which appropriates $16,600,000 for a Brigade Activity Center at the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Maryland. The Conferees agreed to deny funding of the Brigade Activity Center at the U.S. Naval Academy because of budget constraints. However, the Department is urged to submit a reprogramming request for this project using available savings.

Amendment No. 117: Provides that honorarium income shall be limited to 40 percent of salary, instead of adjusting rules regarding compensation for professional services and affiliations with business entities as proposed by the Senate. The increase from 30 percent to 40 percent only affects Members of the Senate since rule XLVII of the Rules of the House of Representatives, which imposes a 30 percent cap, will continue to be in effect for Members of the House.

DADE COUNTY, FLORIDA METRORAIL

Amendment No. 118: Deletes language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate requiring the Secretary of Transportation to issue in the Federal Register a notice of intent to prepare an environmental impact statement for the construction of the north and south legs of the downtown component of metrorail in Dade County, Florida. The conferees have deleted the House language because it is addressed in connection with the amendment numbered 8.

EXPRESSWAY GAP CLOSING PROJECT

Amendment No. 119: Deletes language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate appropriating $23,500,000 for a highway construction project to close an expressway gap on California Route 113. The conferees have deleted the House language because it is addressed in connection with the amendment numbered 8.

DETROIT TRANSIT SYSTEM

Amendment No. 120: Deletes language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate prohibiting the use of certain mass transportation section 9 grant funds to cover cost overruns of the Detroit Central Automated Transit (peoplemover) system. The conferees have deleted the House language because it is addressed in connection with the amendment numbered 8.

EMERGENCY RELIEF HIGHWAY FUNDS

Amendment No. 121: Deletes language proposed by the Senate increasing the state limitation for receipt of Federal-aid highway emergency relief funds from $30,000,000 to $55,000,000 for grants associated with disasters that occurred in calendar year 1985. The conferees have deleted the Senate language because it is addressed in connection with the amendment numbered 8.

MINIMUM DRINKING AGE

Amendment No. 122: Deletes language proposed by the Senate making permanent the withholding provisions contained in Public Law 98-363. The House resolution contained no similar provision.

Amendment No. 123: Inserts Sec. 138 instead of Sec. 114 as proposed by the House and Sec. 203 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 124: Inserts Sec. 139 instead of Sec. 115 as proposed by the House and Sec. 204 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 125: Inserts Sec. 140 instead of Sec. 116 as proposed by the House and Sec. 205 as proposed by the Senate.

TREASURY POSTAL SERVICE MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Amendment No. 126: Changes section number and inserts a provision proposed by the Senate which would permit the Secretary of the Treasury to continue to have two Under Secretaries, but it would not require that one of those Under Secretaries be for Monetary Affairs. This provision permits the Secretary to have more flexibility in the assignment of duties to Under Secretaries in Treasury.

Amendment No. 127: Changes section number and inserts a provision proposed by the Senate which increases from 4 to 20 the number of airports at which reimbursable Customs Services may be provided. Small airports throughout the country are being provided with Customs Service on a reimbursable basis and this provides for an expansion of that program.

Amendment No. 128: Changes section number and inserts a provision proposed by the Senate which would permit the U.S. Secret Service to expend up to $75,000 for installation of security devices and construction related to the providing of security on certain residences of protectees. The current limitation is $10,000.

Amendment No. 129: Changes section number and inserts a provision proposed by the Senate which permits the Board of Governors of the U.S. Postal Service to meet for 42 days per year instead of 30 days as is provided for in current law.

Amendment No. 130: Changes section number and inserts a provision proposed by the Senate which prohibits the Office of Management and Budget from amending the administrative or regulatory methodology employed by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms to assure compliance with the Federal Alcohol Administration Act. This prohibits OMB from eliminating the form by which labels are approved for use on alcoholic beverages.

Amendment No. 131: Changes section number and inserts a provision proposed by the Senate amended to authorize the relocation of the International Trade Administration in Boston, MA. The Conferees direct that the General Services Administration take into account all the cost and other factors involved in this proposed relocation and take whatever action is most advantageous to the government and report back to the Committees on Appropriations by February 1, 1986.

Amendment No. 132: Changes section number and inserts a provision proposed by the Senate which temporarily extends the Current law regarding the retirement contributions which new federal employees are required to make the Civil Service retirement fund. The federal retirement program for new federal employees has not yet been enacted into law. Pending the enactment of that law, temporary adjustments have been made in employee contributions. That temporary legislation expires January 1, 1986. This provision extends that temporary legislation.

Amendment No. 133: Changes section number and inserts a provision proposed by the Senate which modifies the Ethics in Government Act of 1978. It inserts a new provision of permanent law which authorizes the President to require certain federal employees to file a confidential financial disclosure report.

Amendment No. 134: Deletes language proposed by the Senate which would have increased the limit on certain distilled spirit plants exempt from bond requirements when producing alcohol fuels.

Amendment No. 135: Inserts Sec. 149 instead of Sec. 117 as proposed by the House and Sec. 215 as proposed by the Senate.

COMMUNICATION FROM TOMMY LEE WINEBRENNER

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from Mr. Tommy Lee Winebrenner, floor assistant to the minority, which was read:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, December 10, 1985.
Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Please accept my resignation as Floor Assistant to the Minority to be effective at the close of business December 31, 1985.

As I leave this great and unique institution, I will take with me many fond memories of history being made.

It has been an honor and a privilege for me to work for the House of Representatives for over thirty two years. I shall greatly miss the many friends I have come to know and trust.

Thank you for your kindnesses.

With every good wish, I am,

Sincerely,

TOMMY LEE WINEBRENNER.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules, the letter will be printed in the Journal.

TOMMY LEE WINEBRENNER

(Mr. MICHEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, this House of Representatives could not function as an institution if it were not for some of the wonderful, great people that help us make it what it is.

For the last 32 years, one of those individuals has been Tommy Winebrenner, who came to this body sponsored by one Charlie Halleck, who some of you older Members knew very well from that great State of Indiana.

Tommy's resignation was just laid down and without my even saying a word, we have witnessed an outward manifestation from this House of the love and affection we have for you Tommy. The standing ovation and applause speak much better than any words I might say.

Tommy Winebrenner, we wish you well. You have served this institution with distinction. We are all proud of your service and we wish you all the best in the future.

FURTHER CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1986

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 348 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 348

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider the conference report on the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 465) making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1986, and for other purposes, all points of order against the conference report and against its consideration are hereby waived, and the conference report shall be considered as having been read if it has been available to Members for at least one hour before it is called up for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TAYLOR] for the purpose of debate only, pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 348 provides for the consideration of the conference report on House Joint Resolution 465, the continuing appropriations bill for fiscal year 1986. The rule waives all points of order against the conference report and against its consideration. The rule further provides that the reading of the conference report is dispensed with if it has been available to Members at least 1 hour prior to its consideration.

As my colleagues are aware, earlier this week the House rejected a conference report on the continuing resolution, necessitating another conference with the other body. This rule provides for the expeditious consideration of the second conference report on House Joint Resolution 465. Mr. Speaker, this conference report is similar to the conference report rejected earlier this week. But there are some major differences as follows: the conference report contains an overall reduction of $300 million in domestic programs; new budget authority for defense is reduced by $1.3 billion below the previous level of $282.5 billion; there is no provision relating to minimum drinking age and Federal aid highway funds; and, the conference report clarifies that the honorarium language included in the conference report applies only to the Senate—House rules remain the same.

Mr. Speaker, this further conference agreement addresses the concerns expressed by the House last Monday. The bill provides full year funding for seven appropriation bills, four of them in their entirety: Defense, foreign aid, Interior, and Transportation. Three bills are covered by reference: Agriculture, District of Columbia and Treasury-Postal Service. The other six appropriations bills have been signed into law.

Mr. Speaker, it is imperative that the House move to the consideration of this conference report. Funding for the programs whose appropriations have not been provided through the normal appropriations process is set to expire, as Members know, at midnight tonight.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this is the rule by which the Committee on Rules hopes to make this a merry Christmas for all of us and for the rest of the Government.

This rule provides for the consideration of the new conference report on House Joint Resolution 465, making continuing appropriations for the rest of the year 1986.

The rule is the vehicle by which the Appropriations Committee comes to the floor, and in accord with the spirit of the season the rule should be adopted.

Mr. Speaker, when the House failed to agree to the first conference report on Monday night, many of us worried that the Congress would be forced to remain in session until Christmas Eve or even Christmas Day in order to finance the operations of Government that have not received their appropriations.

The adoption of this rule will not guarantee that today will be our last day, but it will move us one step closer to adjournment.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] has explained that this rule waives all points of order against the conference report and against its consideration.

These provision of the rule make it possible for the House to proceed with timely consideration of the conference report. Some of the provisions of rule XXVIII relating to conference reports could well delay consideration of this conference report, and the Committee on Rules felt these waivers were necessary.

Mr. Speaker, the primary aspect of rule XXVIII that is waived by this rule is the 3-day layover requirement. The rule provides that the reading of the conference report shall be dispensed with if it has been available to Members for at least 1 hour before it is called up for consideration.

When the Committee on Rules met last night, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], the ranking Republican member of the committee, indicated that they had reached a new agreement with their counterparts in the other body, and that they would be prepared to file their report this morning.

According to the two gentleman, the conferees have addressed the concerns voiced by the Members of the House last Tuesday by making further reductions of $300 million in domestic spending and by making further reductions of $1.3 billion in defense spending.

Mr. Speaker, the two gentleman also told us that the conferees also removed two nongermane Senate amendments from the report. Members will recall that the other body insisted on language regarding the withholding of Federal-aid highway funds from States that have not adopted the age of 21 as a minimum drinking age. In addition, the other body's conferees tried to change the rules of the House regarding honorariums.

The conference report that will be brought to the House under this rule leaves out these two nongermane amendments, according to the committee chairman and the ranking member of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. Speaker, enactment of this conference report is needed to continue funding for several major Government agencies that will run out without the budget authority at midnight tonight.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER], a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, let me first commend our conferees on the House side. I think they fought the good fight yesterday, and the fact that the other body largely prevailed does not reflect adversely on them. Time, of course, at this point in the process is a weapon. We are at the end, everyone is tired, we want to go home, and certainly our conferees did their very best to have the House provisions prevail.

Largely, however, they did not prevail. They did not prevail on something that has been of great concern to me since I was elected to Congress 6 years ago and on which I have worked very hard, and that is the issue of funding for the production of chemical weapons.

Members of the House will recall that while we authorized chemical weapons production earlier in the year, it was fenced. It was fenced in such a way that our NATO allies would have had to agree to accept and deploy these weapons on their soil, something they would never do, and it was further fenced for a period of 2 years. On the funding side, the House appropriated not 1 cent for chemical weapons production. The Senate, of course, authorized and appropriated the entire $163.5 million for facilities construction and production. When the conferees first met, Mr. Speaker, the agreement was that there would be production at $21.7 million of the 155mm chemical weapons projectile only, there would be no production for the Bigeye bomb, and the 155mm production money would be fenced in any case until October 1, 1986 so that there would be no production funding in this fiscal year.

This provision, which was in the fourth continuing resolution that was defeated, is exactly the same in this fifth continuing resolution. I do not agree with it, and I hope the Members will vote against this continuing resolution. The fact is that with this continuing resolution the foot is in the door and the historic commitment that the United States made to not produce these terrible weapons 16 years ago will in fact be broken.

Mr. Speaker, the fight on chemical weapons will continue. I, for one, am not going to stand idly by while the United States wastes $20 billion or more on new weapons we do not need.

Mr. Speaker, let me address one other subject. Seeing this process up close as I have, there is something that this House and the other body must do. The thing that we must do is to terminate the use of the continuing resolution. It is a terrible, unconscionable, irresponsible way to legislate, and it is something that none of us should have any part of.

This is the fifth continuing resolution, Mr. Speaker. It is the sixth if we count the one that failed. Our deadline of September 30 has long since passed. It has been pushed back five times, and here we are on December 19 with our work still not finished.

And here we are, lumping $370 billion worth of spending into one bill on one vote, and while we can largely blame the other body for its failure to move the appropriations process forward in a responsible manner, the fact is that this is no way to do business.

I will be working in the second session of this Congress to see that we do not have these kinds of continuing resolutions in the future. We should be handling each of the 13 appropriation bills one at a time, letting them stand on their own, letting them be amended and discussed, letting the conference reports be considered separately, and getting them out and on the President's desk on time. This is my commitment and I invite all my colleagues who care about fairness and fiscal responsibility to join my next year in this effort.

Mr. Speaker, it is high time that responsibility worked its way into this process and that we act in an up-front and equitable manner.

I will not support this CR. I am not satisfied with the provisions. I imagine that other Members, anxious to go home, will. But, Mr. Speaker, the fact is we did not prevail in the conference, the report is substantially the same as the one we defeated on Monday and still deserves a "no" vote.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS].

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this rule and the conference report.

I think on one major arms control issue, the banning of testing of antisatellite weapons, this conference report sticks very strongly with the House position.

I want to say to my friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER] who has fought this valiant fight on chemical weapons, that the money in this bill for the 155mm shell is fenced until 1987. I hope during this next 9 months that we will get meaningful negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union on chemical weapons and then this Appropriations Committee can take another look at this issue, because the money is in fact fenced until fiscal year 1987 for production.

I want to compliment the conferees for a very valiant job.

I want to say to my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. BARNEY FRANK, that I think the fact this bill went down once did strengthen the conferees' hands. They were able to reduce $1.3 billion from defense. They were able to tie down the use of the $6.3 billion transfer fund.

They also have achieved a procurement reform, all the things that were desired by the majority in the House of Representatives.

I want to say to the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN], that on behalf of the younger members of the full committee, we appreciate our ability to participate in the continuing resolution. I want to compliment the gentleman for his leadership on this important legislation as chairman of our conferees. I think all our conferees did a good job.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the House to support this rule and to support this conference report.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN].

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Speaker, this continuing resolution contains the only arms control of this decade.

It cuts $25 billion in military spending off the President's request, it cuts $1.3 billion off the bill we rejected Monday, it fences the $6.3 billion in previously obligated funds to help keep it from being used as a Gramm-Rudman cushion. It adds some meaningful procurement reform and some restrictions on nerve gas. Not as much as I'd like, and not as much as we've going to get next year, but a good start.

All that's terrific. But what I'm going to talk about now is the arms control we can create here today.

Not arms control negotiations. Arms control. Period.

In 60 minutes, we here can make more progress in preventing nuclear war than anybody has made in 6 years.

We can stop Asat testing on both sides. That's what this resolution does. No "ifs," "ands," or "buts." No hokey escape clauses that let the President test if he certifies he's thinking about attempting to consider negotiating about when to have the next arms control talks.

Just clear, cold turkey no testing. We block not just two tests, but all tests of this weapon in any fiscal year.

But we have to pass this resolution. We're not likely to get another chance. Right now there are two Asat targets up there. If we don't block the tests, now, they'll happen and they'll provoke the Russians to do their first test since 1982. Then there won't be any Asat control.

For America's sake, let's do it now. Let's control arms by voting "yes."

Mr TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding.

I am pleased to learn that this continuing resolution and its arms control provisions will have extraterritorial application and will prevent the Soviets from further testing. And, if you believe that, I have some costume jewelry I'd like to sell you.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes. to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS].

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I rise just to thank the gentleman from Mississippi, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] for taking out of the continuing resolution the provision which would have made permanent the law regarding the enforcement of a 21-year-old drinking law around the country. It is out of here, but I also want to raise the awareness of this body that it somehow has worked its way into the reconciliation package. Those of us who voted against the continuing resolution because it was in there will continue our fight against the reconciliation package, unless we are afforded at least an opportunity to vote on that issue and to debate that issue.

I will not reiterate what I said before, but this is no way to legislate such an important and such a critical issue to the young people of this country. Not only with respect to the young people and their privileges of adulthood, but also there is strong evidence that the number of alcohol-related accidents for young people in States that have raised their drinking ages is increasing, not decreasing. We ought to get these facts before this body and be on record how we feel about this critical issue. I do not need to say again how this issue runs a huge fast track truck over States rights and the 21st amendment.

Again, I thank the two members of the Appropriations Committee for taking the issue out of the continuing resolution.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN].

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, let me say at the outset that I rise in support of the continuing resolution and the rule which is being offered today. Although I voted against it several days ago, I will vote for it today.

I am disappointed with the disposition of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, but I understand that die has been cast.

I salute Chairman WHITTEN and his Republican counterparts for the fine job they have done in resolving very many difficult issues.

I would like to speak to one issue today which has been addressed by the gentleman from the other side of the aisle.

Members should be advised that when they return to their districts and speak to the issue of drunk driving that the compromise reached on the continuing resolution removes language offered by the gentleman from New Jersey in the other body. In 1984 we established a national uniform drinking age. The amendment offered by the gentleman in the other body would have prevented States from lowering their minimum drinking age when the current Federal withholding of highway funds ends.

Unless and until we adopt that language, we are inviting a patchwork quilt of minimum drinking ages across our Nation; nightly treks by our children across State borders to get drunk and the carnage and suffering which necessarily follow.

Mr. Speaker, let me refer to a study in my own home State of Illinois. According to the Illinois Secretary of State, in the first 3 years after Illinois increased its drinking age, total statewide alcohol-related fatalities decreased 7.4 percent—decreased 7.4 percent. In the counties which border Wisconsin, which has a lower drinking age, where our children would go in the evening to drink and come back drunk to Illinois, alcohol-related fatalities increased—increased 25 percent.

A study by the Wisconsin Department of Transportation concluded that Wisconsin is an island that causes disproportionate alcohol-related accidents by out-of-State youthful drivers in their border counties.

I do not mean to isolate any criticism to the State of Wisconsin. What we have found in Illinois, unfortunately, can be found to be true across the country where States have different drinking ages and border one another.

Mr. Speaker, our refusal to set and enforce a national standard for a minimum drinking age betrays our pledges at home to take the issue of drunk driving seriously. Those Members who choose to lurk in the shadows of States rights must accept the responsibility for their positions. A continuing resolution may be no place to fight this battle, but I pledge my support to continue this battle to end this needless slaughter of our children.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The rule, of course, does make in order the approval of the continuing resolution. When the previous continuing resolution passed the House, it was characterized in the Washington Post as having a provision for amendment No. 114, which did "pave the way for possible congressional pay increase by making it more difficult for Congress to block proposed pay hikes."

That provision remains in the continuing resolution.

The bill also had amendment No. 117 in it, that previously failed in the House. That particular provision was characterized by Common Cause as "a proposal on raising the honoraria limit, which was a Christmas bonus for Members of Congress."

That has not changed substantively. It has, in fact, been narrowed to some degree and made clear that the Members of the other body will be those who will receive this Christmas bonus, however, it does seem to me that it is one of those cases where it is an amendment that should be brought back in disagreement. I think there is a good deal of disagreement with passing that Christmas bonus on to the other body. At the very least, the membership in this body should have a chance to vote on that matter before it is sent out of this House and given to the other body.

So on those two issues, it seems to me we still have some cause for opposing the continuing resolution that will come to us as a result of this rule.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this point to address some concerns of Members on the defense portion, particularly related to the bill as it came to us the first time in the conference report relating to the $6.3 billion and the concern that this could be used as a way to avoid the impact of Gramm-Rudman.

There were several concerns; one, that the $6.3 billion was taken out of unobligated balances and handed as a pot to the Secretary to be able to disburse to various areas in the reprogramming process. The concern was that it would be used as a way to pad certain accounts when it came to sequestration.

Second, that it provided a great deal of flexibility to the Secretary in terms of the areas that he wanted to focus on.

Third, we were concerned generally about the level of budget authority contained in the bill.

Last, the fact that there were no procurement reforms that were included in the final package.

I must say that with the cooperation of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CHAPPELL] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. ADDABBO], chairman of the subcommittee, and some very difficult negotiations with the other body, that we achieved, I think, some important modifications on those provisions.

Let me just list those for the benefit of the Members.

The first point is that we were able to reduce overall budget authority by $1.3 billion to $281.2 billion.

Second, that the $6.3 billion that was in a general unobligated balance account is now specifically targeted at areas so that there is no flexibility. It will be targeted to military pay, to retirement savings, to the mariners fund, to coastal defense account, and to readiness in defined numbers.

In addition to that, we were able to add language that none of these balances may be transferrred, reprogrammed or otherwise applied to offset the impact of sequestration under the Gramm-Rudman bill.

Fourth, we were able to obtain general language in the conference report that says that the conferees agree that none of the funds appropriated by this act shall be applied in a manner that would offset the impact of sequestration under the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act.

Last, we were able to obtain one of the procurement reforms on allowable costs.

Obviously, it is not what everyone would desire, but I think it is a significant improvement over the conference as it came here, and I am prepared to support the conference on that basis.

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ASPIN].

Mr. ASPIN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, there is one part of this package that the gentleman in the well has presented, and I would compliment the members of the committee for their work on this bill and on this package and what has happened here.

But I think it is very important, since we are establishing legislative history and dealing with this amazing thing called Gramm-Rudman and the sequestration process, that we nail down one thing very, very specifically. In this bill we have some appropriations that were not authorized. They have occurred mostly in the Senate, and the conference has cut down some of those. The conference does include language that says that none of these moneys that have been appropriated but not authorized can be spent until they are authorized.

My question to the gentleman in the well is: For the purposes of Gramm-Rudman, is money that has been appropriated but not authorized, is that in the base for the Gramm-Rudman sequestration or not? I ask the gentleman because, obviously, if it is in the base, that is a way to pad the base and to prevent Gramm-Rudman from biting so heavily on defense, by appropriating things, bringing it back in a continuing resolution and not allowing it to be authorized or anybody to vote on it, and padding and protecting against the effects of Gramm-Rudman.

Mr. PANETTA. I share the gentleman's concern on that. We discussed this during the negotiations. It is my understanding on Gramm-Rudman that sequestration would apply only to budget authority and unobligated balances. Accordingly, therefore, it is my belief that funds that are not authorized do not count for purposes of sequestration.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FRANK. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to express my appreciation for the work done by the gentleman from California, the gentleman from Florida, and others who came together to try and work this out.

I intend now to vote for this continuing resolution, although it clearly has a long way to go. What we were confronted with Monday was a situation where, partly by some intent in the other body, partly by some other practices, we had a situation where every department of Government was going to get a haircut, so they bought a wig for the Pentagon so not a hair on its head would have been touched. I think we have substantially diminished the wig, but I want to make sure that we have done the maximum possible.

The $1.3 billion is clearly a savings. This is $1.3 less in defense, and there are some savings elsewhere. The procurement reform is an important improvement. Nailing down the $6.3 billion, as I understand it now, if those moneys cannot be spent or need not be spent for appropriated purposes, they will not be spent. They will stay there.

I also understand from the chairman of the subcommittee, the acting chairman, who is here and who I understand will speak, that this will probably mean that we will not need a supplemental which we might otherwise have needed.

Mr. CHAPPELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I would be pleased to yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. CHAPPELL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is correct. It was our intention to handle these moneys in this fashion, because we knew there would be expenditures necessary not only for retirement but on the pay increase and on certain other items which we specified, If we went ahead and put them in in this fashion, we anticipate that we would not need a supplemental. We do not know what could happen, but barring unknown circumstances, that is our intent.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] has expired.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PANETTA. I thank the gentleman for yielding this additional time to me.

Mr. FRANK. If the gentleman will yield further to me, I will be very brief.

The key point was that raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin. There is some money in here that was appropriated which cannot be legally spent without an authorization. Some may get an authorization. That remains for the legislative process. But the key point that the gentleman from California stressed, and I realize it is not yet nailed down one way or the other, but I thank him for his expression.

I gather his intent, on behalf of the leadership, is to say that if that money that is appropriated is ultimately unspent because there is not an authorization, we will endeavor to take the necessary steps to see that it is not counted as part of the money sequestered under Gramm-Rudman, and I gather the gentleman from Florida also had some views on that.

Mr. PANETTA. I would yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CHAPPELL] on that point.

Mr. CHAPPELL. The gentleman is correct, we have stated time and time again, both from the standpoint of the Senate conferees and the standpoint of the House conferees that there is no intent to permit under any circumstances, by any method, the building of any kind of a pot which would be used to offset Gramm-Rudman.

Mr. FRANK. I thank the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, this is the first appropriation bill that comes before us since the passage of Gramm-Rudman, so it takes on an added importance because it will establish the base for both defense and domestic spending with which we must live for these coming years. So let us be careful about what we are doing here today.

This bill is improved from the one that we sent back to conference and many Members wish to vote for it, but do it understanding this: Last year in defense we spent, as a nation, $275.4 billion for those defense items that are in this bill; $275 billion. Under this bill we will spend $281 billion, an increase of $5.8 billion, or 2.1 percent.

What about the domestic side? Last year for those domestic programs that are covered under this bill, this Nation spent $94.4 billion. Under this bill that is not being increased but reduced from $94 billion to $87 billion, a cut of $6.7 billion in the domestic programs covered by this bill.

So while defense is being increased almost $6 billion, domestic programs are being decreased—decreased—almost $7 billion. Other appropriation bills already passed the Congress, and although I was unable to get the totals from CBO, I can tell my colleagues that in the very important areas of education, health, and human services, the Congress has already accepted cuts of $500 million.

So let us be clear with the American people. This year this Congress, in preparation for the cuts in Gramm-Rudman, have increased defense spending, increased dollars for the Pentagon, by many billions. We have decreased dollars to be spent here at home on the education, the health and the services that the American people demand, and we have decreased them by many billions of dollars. This bill does not prepare us, as I would like to be prepared, for facing the dramatic cuts that will come off of this base under this thing called Gramm-Rudman.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE].

Mr. WOLPE. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I intend to support this continuing resolution, and I want to particularly commend the House conferees on both sides of the aisle for the decision they have made within that continuing resolution to terminate one of the most wasteful and mismanaged programs in the entire Federal Government. I am referring, of course, to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

That decision to terminate the Synthetic Fuels Corporation was not an easy one to make for many Members of this body and of the other body. We make cuts in programs all the time, but it is quite another matter to terminate an entire bureaucracy. But that decision is indeed a beautiful Christmas present for the American taxpayer. It represents, in combination with the decision that we took in the last session of Congress, a cumulative savings to American taxpayers of some $12 billion.

Let me say that there is no bureaucracy more deserving of termination. There is no bureaucracy in the Federal Government that has been more consistently arrogant in the conduct of its business. Even today, as we are debating this continuing resolution, the Synthetic Fuels Corporation is trying to find a means of pushing out the door another half billion dollars in subsidies, absolutely wasteful subsidies, trying to take advantage of the time gap that they claim will exist between the termination of the short continuing resolution and the one we are now discussing.

I hope the SFC will reconsider that effort. I doubt that it will. This most recent initiative on the part of the arrogant bureaucrats over at the Corporation highlights the importance of the decision we are making today to terminate once and for all the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

I urge adoption of the continuing resolution.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT].

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time and I take the time only to engage the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CHAPPELL] in a brief colloquy with regard to the procurement reforms.

First, I want to express my thanks to the committee members for reincluding these provisions in the bill, and second, to ask with regard to one of the reforms a question.

Originally when we asked the committee to include language requiring the Defense Department to consult with congressional committees in establishing their definitions with regard to exclusions, limitations, and qualifications on what they can spend and buy, that is allowable costs, that was agreed to, but only with the provision that that be kept secret, that that not be public prior to its publication.

My understanding is that that provision with regard to secrecy is now out of the bill and it was not contemplated by those who drafted this provision that it be secret. Is that correct?

Mr. CHAPPELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYANT. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. CHAPPELL. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BRYANT. I thank the gentleman and I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to my moderate friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, one of the things that Government requires for consumers of this country is that we have a Truth-in-Lending Act. One of the things that we should follow ourselves is a truth-in-legislating act.

This bill that is before us, it is about an inch thick, is called joint resolution making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1986 and for other purposes. The problem with its title is that it is really not being honest with all of us. What we should call this tome is an act to deny the Chief Executive the ability to exercise the power given to that person by the Constitution; namely, the veto.

When we send to the White House roughly a third of the Federal spending in 1 year in one document, virtually on the eve of Christmas, we are severely limiting the options of our President with respect to controlling runaway spending. We should not lose sight of the fact that the resort to the CR is not an accident. It is a deliberate result from the political processes of this country, whereby one of the three institutions of Government, the White House, can be controlled by one party, the Republicans in this instance, and one or both Houses of Congress can be controlled by another party, the Democrats. The Democrats control this House and have continuously for the last 30 years.

Their remedy for the ills of America is to increase social spending anytime they get the chance, and the means by which they have asserted their leverage is to combine in this continuing resolution tempting morsels for defense along with sensitive increases for domestic program spending. And then to give to the President the uneviable choice of whether or not to criticize the increases in social spending that are out of control in this country, and in so doing, limit the ability that he, as our Chief Executive, believes we need in the area of increased defense spending.

That is the game that is being played.

I do not choose to give this Member's vote from California in the way of approval of this subterfuge undermining the use of the Chief Executive asserting a veto. In the last 4 years since President Reagan was elected, the CR, has been too often used. In fact, it has become commonplace.

I think we should just reject this as an unreasonable attempt to undermine the ability of a Chief Executive to exercise a veto should he choose to do so.

Another element of the CR that I find particularly reprehensible relates to the ability of any of us to offer any amendments to any of the measures that are contained in it. None are made in order. It is said that if we had the ability to amend any of the provisions, if this Member had the ability, other Members would want that, and so we do not allow any.

This is a subversion of the legislative process, and I think we should give it the fate it justly deserves and reject it.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I think we should support this continuing resolution. It is all that we can get. I think it is a major step forward from the resolution that we had before.

I would like to commend my colleague, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN] for the efforts that he made on behalf of getting the restrictions of Asat testing. I would like to commend my colleagues, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT] and the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER], for the efforts they made that led to the successful inclusion of at least one of the procurement reforms that this House has spoken on now several times overwhelmingly to see that we change the manner in which the Pentagon procures and lets contracts so that we will not have the wasteful system that we have today, and I think that that single reform is an important step forward in that effort.

I would, however, say that I think that those people who do not work with the Pentagon on a day-to-day basis ought to understand what we are doing here today, because I think this is the first effort in starting to pad the books to try and insulate the Pentagon from the full force of the effects of Gramm-Rudman, and I would hope that those who are concerned with the domestic side of the ledger will understand what is going on here when we meet sequestration in the months ahead.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. ADDABBO].

Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule and the continuing resolution.

Mr. Speaker, the conferees on the Department of Defense Appropriations Act portion of the continuing resolution bring back a very delicately balanced agreement on the defense issues. This further conference agreement is even more fragile. We were faced with some extremely difficult issues which had to be weighed against each other and a final agreement crafted. These issues included the total funds provided for the defense programs, the funds allowed and the restrictions imposed on these funds for chemical weapons and facilities, the restriction on antisatellite weapons testing, the amounts approved for the strategic defense initiative [SDI], and many other important issues. Not all Members are satisfied with the conference agreement. I have difficulty with portions of the agreement myself, but this is a compromise and I think basically a good bill.

The conference agreement appropriates $281.2 billion in new budget authority some $1.3 billion below the original conference settlement and we include a procurement reform provision relating to allowable costs which involved extremely difficult negotiations. This provision is a compromise, but it is the best your conferees could extract from the Senate. We negotiated for days on this one issue and you can rest assured we got the best compromise that was possible under the circumstances.

We can all claim a victory on this compromise language because it puts Congress in the process of reviewing DOD's policy of allowable costs allowance which is a first.

There was some concern regarding the treatment of unobligated balances of $6.3 billion in the original conference agreement. While the conferees did not give the Defense Department a great deal of flexibility on the use of the funds in the first instance, we have specifically set forth in the law the allocations of these set-asides. These funds can be used only to finance the military pay raise, the payments to the retirement trust fund, the mariner fund, the coastal defense augmentation account, and increased readiness of conventional forces. The conferees also included bill language that would prohibit the funds set aside in this provision from being used to offset any Gramm-Rudman reductions. The original conference agreement subjected these same funds to the reprogramming process and we continue this requirement.

There was not much flexibility before on the use of these funds, but there is none whatsoever now.

The conference agreement provides $126 million for binary chemical weapons and facilities. This includes $98.3 million for the Bigeye bomb production facilities, $6 million for Bigeye operation testing, and $21.7 million for the production of the 15mm chemical projectile. Of course, there are a number of restrictions on the use of these funds.

First, obligation of all funds is made subject to an additional requirement that the President certify to the Congress that a force goal stating the requirement for modernization of the United States share of NATO chemical deterrent has been submitted to NATO and formally adopted by the North Atlantic Alliance.

Second, obligation of funds for Bigeye components is subject to the requirement that the Secretary of Defense submit a report describing the operational requirements for Bigeye, actual performance of bigeye during operational testing with respect to the requirements, and any exceptions deemed acceptable. Obligation for Bigeye components may occur no sooner than 60 days after submission of the report.

Third, none of the funds included for procurement of the GB-2 artillery projectile may be obligated before October 1, 1986, and then only when the provisions on NATO consultation are satisfied. Final assembly of the GB-2 may not occur before October 1, 1987, and then only when the provisions on conditions for final assembly are satisfied.

The conference agreement includes a prohibition on the use of funds in this act or any other act to carry out a test of an antisatellite weapon against an object in space until the President certifies that the Soviet Union has conducted, after October 3, 1985, such a test against an object in space of a dedicated antisatellite weapon. This was a difficult position to hold but your House conferees worked hard on this matter. Let me point out that if this conference agreement is not approved, Asat testing can go forward now.

The conference agreement provides $2.750 billion for strategic defense initiatives some $250 million above the House but $213 million below the Senate and roughly $1 billion below the budget request.

This conference report appropriates over $146 billion for the military personnel and operation and maintenance account which includes many billions of dollars to improve the quality of life of our troops and to improve the readiness of our forces.

The conference agreement provides approximately $20 billion for the Guard and Reserve Forces including over $1.5 billion above the budget request for a separate Guard and Reserve equipment account.

This is a good agreement and I urge its adoption.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. STRANG].

Mr. STRANG. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

My colleagues, I have a very brief statement to make to put your fears at rest about some of the charges made about the proposed uses for synfuels in Colorado, and I think it is time that you knew some facts.

The facts are these: The combination of the current loan guarantees and the additional moneys proposed, bonus payments or payments for fuel can never exceed $500 million, never exceed $500 million. Any statement to the contrary is false.

I think you should understand that we all need that production, that kind of protection from this program becoming a boondoggle. The product goes to the Department of Defense. When the program has been proven, it is over. It is not a national oil shale production program and was never intended to be, as most of the Members in this House realize.

Additionally, Mr. Speaker, in order to qualify for payments, Union Oil Corp. has to produce at a sustained rate of 6,000 barrels a day for 30 days or they do not get a check.

Those facts have to be kept in mind as we attempt a small-scale effort to know that the Defense Department and this country can have one additional source of commercial oil production when we need it.

When that experiment is over, however, Mr. Speaker, it is over. Any statements to the contrary are misstatements of fact, and I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the rule just adopted, I call up the conference report on the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 465) making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1986, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to House Resolution 348, the conference report is considered as having been read.

(For conference report and statement, see prior proceedings of the House of today.)

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report to accompany House Joint Resolution 465, making further continuing appropriations for fiscal year 1986, and that I be allowed to include extraneous and tabular matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, at the outset I wish to thank the Committee on Rules today, and particularly the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TAYLOR]. I appreciate their cooperation and giving time to our colleagues with whom we had arranged to give time in case we did not have the time to use.

Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to come to you today and bring before you the continuing resolution, on which our committee has been working for some time.

May I also add that I do not believe we could handle our job here like we do, except for the very fine staff that we have. I do not know whether you realize just how much of a job our committee faced.

There were 29 conferees from the Senate, 22 full-time conferees on the part of the House. We bring you a bill in which I take great pride because we have not a single amendment in controversy, not even a technical amendment.

Now when I say that, I am proud that you have trusted us to do the very best we could. I have in all candor to say that the fact that everybody wants to go home may have contributed somewhat to that and enabled us to be granted a rule which made this possible.

In the interests of time let me tell you, and I repeat, your Committee on Appropriations through the years has held appropriation bills below the budget. It is those things that go around our review which causes our problem.

May I say when I talk about how proud we are to have the overall support that is shown here, I have had delivered to me a statement of administration policy, December 19, 1985:

H.J. Res. 465, making continuing appropriations for fiscal year 1986, Whitten, Democrat of Mississippi: The Administration supports House passage of the conference report to accompany H.J. Res. 465.

So, to have the support that has been shown here and the support in the committee, at least it gives me great confidence that they have believed that we have done the very best we could; and we have.

We have considered every viewpoint, we have listened to all those that wish to testify, we have tried to include all branches, and we brought you the results.

For your information and most folks that know it but have not paid attention to it, in 1981, your Committee on Appropriations authorized and directed an investigation of procurement policies and practices. Policies is what they say they do; practices is what they do.

These results have been made available to the public for quite a long time, and I hope we are on the road to cleaning up some of the things that seem to be going on.

Again, the Senate conferees, House conferees, and the executive branch have gone along to where we bring you a bill without a single amendment in disagreement, not even a technical amendment. In all candor, I have to admit perhaps it is because we are ready to go home.

We have a good resolution; I hope we may enjoy your support, and its passage.

Mr. Speaker, after some very difficult negotiations with the Senate and the administration, we have now been able to develop a further continuing resolution conference report which I believe should receive your approval.

Our original resolution was $18.5 billion below the budget requests and $2.9 billion below the fiscal year 1985 level. Basically two broad changes have been made here. First, some $300 million of additional reductions were made in domestic spending to help solve OMB's problems which are mainly related to scorekeeping issues.

Second, $1.3 billion was reduced in defense and other changes made such as procurement reform to meet objections of House Members. The specifics are as follows:

DOMESTIC REDUCTIONS

Agriculture: Six-tenths of 1 percent reduction—approximately $200 million from all accounts in the bill excluding child nutrition and special milk.

Transportation: $50 million reduction in U.S. Coast Guard.

Interior: Six-tenths of 1 percent reduction—approximately $50 million from all accounts in the bill.

MILITARY SPENDING

Reduces new budget authority by $1.3 billion below the previous level of $282.5 billion.

Unobligated balances set aside would be for specific purposes only:

Military retired pay.

Active duty pay.

The mariner fund, subject to authorization.

Coastal defense augmentation account.

Readiness accounts subject to reprogramming practices.

Provides for procurement reform on allowable costs.

Language dealing with defense contractor issues was agreed to.

Mr. Speaker, we need a strong defense, and no one has supported sufficient funds for defense longer than I. But what we are engaged in now is military spending.

In fact, I personally made exception to parts of amendments—in defense amendment No. 4 in regard to chemical weapons, the Strategic Defense Initiative, and unobligated balances set aside; amendment No. 5.

In addition, the Senate receded from its insistence on amendment No. 122 holding up Federal Aid Highway Funds from a number of States until their legislatures passed laws on minimum drinking age.

We also made clear amendment No. 117 dealing with honorarium language applies only to the Senate and not the House.

The provisions in the resolution passed by the House directing the Secretary of Agriculture to use existing law on basic commodities and to suspend for 12 months and foreclosure by the Farmers Home Administration were objected to by the Senate. The law remains and I repeat there is no requirement that supports be reduced in order to sell competitively in world trade. Any statements that supports must be reduced in order to sell are absolutely incorrect.

Such provisions are:

SEC. 105. In review of the financial risks facing many farmers, resulting from embargoes and suspension of exports in 1973, 1974, 1975, and 1980, and failure to use the Commodity Credit Corporation for a loan program which led to a fair price from the user, the Secretary of Agriculture shall use his authority under existing law to provide for nonrecourse loans on basic agricultural commodities at such levels as will reflect a fair return to the farm producer above the cost of production, and to issue such regulations as will carry out this provision and as will provide for payment by the purchaser, rather than by appropriation, for basic commodities sold for domestic use and the Secretary of Agriculture shall issue such regulations as will enable producers of any basic agricultural commodity to produce the amount needed for domestic consumption, to maintain the pipeline, and to regain and retain by competitive sales our normal share of the world market.

SEC. 106. Public Law 99-98 funded a study by the Department of Agriculture to determine the losses suffered by United States farm producers of agricultureal products during the last decade as a result of embar-goes on the sale of United States agricultural products and the failure to offer for sale in world markets commodities surplus to domestic needs at competitive prices, for use in determining what part of existing indebtedness of farmers should be canceled as a result of such foreign policy. Pending the completion of the study, the Secretary shall determine, on a case-by-case basis, which borrowers are unable to continue making payments of principal and interest due to embargoes or the failure to sell competitively in world trade and, thereby, qualify for an adjustment of principal and interest due to prevent bankruptcy or foreclosure, all as authorized by existing law.

Upon presentation of substantial evidence to the Secretary that a borrower qualifies, payment of principal and interest shall be suspended and the Secretary shall forego foreclosure of loans owed to the Federal Government, as authorized by law, for 12 months or until an adjustment is agreed upon. Other creditors shall be requested by the Secretary to postpone payments due on the same basis.

We take note again that these actions can be taken under existing law. What we lost was the directive to use this law. It is to be hoped that the Secretary of Agriculture will use such law to require the purchaser to pay the cost of a fair price instead of having to depend upon appropriations; that he will suspend foreclosures for 12 months—and determine the damage to the farmers by the restrictive and partial embargoes in 1973, 1974, 1975, and 1980—and the virtual embargo since—by a failure to sell competitively.

WITHHOLDING OF FUNDS

The question frequently arises as to when and under what conditions Federal funds may be withheld. The daily press regularly carries stories of various departments and agencies holding up funds, in most cases without legal authority.

After the President has signed an appropriations measure, the law requires the funds be made available for obligation for the purpose for which they were appropriated. In a limited number of circumstances, funds may be withheld if done in strict compliance with the provisions authorizing such action. The conferees stress that funds made available under this resolution should be obligated pursuant to law. When any law is used to withhold funds, the funds are to be available for obligation until the message proposing withholding is transmitted to the Congress. This applies additionally to projects that have been planned and are ongoing in nature and involve commitments made over a period of time to assure continuation through completion of such projects.

Many questions have been asked about Gramm-Rudman. May I point out that it includes language that prevents programs, projects, or activities from being eliminated,

Mr. Speaker, it is essential that this bill be enacted. It is a bill that can be supported, and importantly, can be signed.

I have here a letter from OMB which indicates it supports enactment of the resolution.

As was the case with the other conference report, it is below the budget request and below the fiscal year 1985 level.

Compared to the President's requests, the continuing resolution is $18,377 million below in new budget authority, and compared to the fiscal year 1985 level it is $2,929 million below.

It provides full year funding for seven appropriations bills, four in their entirety: Defense, foreign aid, Interior, and Transportation. Three bills are covered by reference: Agriculture, District of Columbia, and Treasury-Postal Service with modification.

Mr. Speaker, before I close let me express my appreciation to all the conferees on both this bill and on the other conference report, and particularly the ranking minority member, SIL CONTE for his help and hard work.

Mr. Speaker, for the first conference, in addition to the subcommittee chairmen and appropriate ranking members, we had as conferees all the members of each subcommittee that had not been to conference on their bills, as follows:

Members for the entire resolution and Senate amendments: Mr. WHITTEN, Mr. BOLAND, Mr. NATCHER, Mr. SMITH of Iowa, Mr. ADDABBO, Mr. YATES, Mr. OBEY, Mr. ROYBAL, Mr. BEVILL, Mr. CHAPPELL, Mr. LEHMAN, Mr. DIXON, Mr. FAZIO, Mr. HEFNER, Mr. CONTE, Mr. MCDADE, Mr. MYERS, Mr. COUGHLIN, Mr. KEMP, Mrs. SMITH, and Mr. SKEEN.

As additional conferees in addition to the above:

For the Agriculture appropriations bill: Mr. TRAXLER, Mr. MCHUGH, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. WATKINS, Mr. DURBIN, and Mr. ROGERS.

For the Defense appropriations bill: Mr. MURTHA, Mr. DICKS, Mr. WILSON, Mr. AUCOIN, Mr. YOUNG, Mr. MILLER, and Mr. LIVINGSTON.

For the Interior appropriations bill: Mr. MURTHA, Mr. DICKS, Mr. AUCOIN, and Mr. LOEFFLER.

For the Transportation bill: Mr. SABO, Mr. GRAY, Mr. CARR, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. MRAZEK, Mr. PURSELL, and Mr. WOLF.

For the foreign assistance appropriation bill: Mr. MCHUGH, Mr. WILSON, Mr. GRAY, Mr. MRAZEK, Mr. EDWARDS, Mr. LEWIS, and Mr. PORTER.

After that conference was concluded and all bills had been through the conference process, and the conference report was defeated, it was necessary to appoint conferees on the further conference. To work out the hitches that had developed, much like a supplemental, the subcommittee chairmen and appropriate minority members were appointed, as follows:

Further continuing appropriations, fiscal year 1986: Mr. WHITTEN, Mr. BOLAND, Mr. NATCHER, Mr. SMITH of Iowa, Mr. ADDABBO, Mr. YATES, Mr. OBEY, Mr. ROYBAL, Mr. BEVILL, Mr. CHAPPELL, Mr. LEHMAN, Mr. DIXON, Mr. FAZIO, Mr. HEFNER, Mr. CONTE, Mr. MCDADE, Mr. MYERS, Mr. COUGHLIN, Mr. KEMP, Mr. REGULA, Mrs. SMITH, and Mr. SKEEN.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the conference report and also wish everyone a happy holiday.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER].

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts, and desires that he would take the well so everybody can have a look at him.

Mr. CONTE. I will later on, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. He looks like Christmas Eve in Pittsfield.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER].

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, if the continuing resolution we defeated earlier this week was a poor one, then this one is also a poor one and should be defeated.

I do not blame our conferees for this; they worked very hard. I blame the process through which they had to work.

If you look at the work product on chemical weapons it is unchanged from Monday's continuing resolution. Production is authorized, although it is fenced until fiscal year 1987. Our conferees fought for the House position. The Senate simply overwhelmed us. I commend our House conferees for doing their best and particularly those seven who excepted the chemical weapons funding section from their approval of the conference report.

If you look at the amount of spending on defense, the conference brought it down less than 1 percent.

It is almost the same figure as the earlier continuing resolution. I said previously this year what we ought to do to address our Nation's severe deficit problem is to freeze every appropriations including defense. Unfortunately, while almost all other appropriations have held the line, this certainly is not a freeze in the defense account.

If you look at procurement reforms, largely unchanged, one small token change is made. Otherwise it is the same as Monday's continuing resolution. If you look at outside earned income for the Senate, which upset so many members, it is exactly the same as it left the House in the other continuing resolution.

If you look at Federal aid for highway funds to ensure that we have a uniform minimum drinking age of 21 in the United States, no change there, either.

All in all, this continuing resolution is almost as bad as the one that we defeated. I will vote "no." I urge my colleagues to vote no. Seven of the thirteen appropriation bills are in this one vote, yes or no up or down, on $370 billion of spending, Mr. Speaker, this is a lousy way to do business.

Mr. FASCELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PORTER. I yield to the distinguished Chairman.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to express my appreciation for the hard work he did on the chemical warfare issue, and I am as disappointed as he is that it was not resolved the way we felt it should be.

I want to join him in expressing our appreciation to the House conferees for fighting long and hard to sustain the House position on that issue, and not withstanding the fact that it was not resolved entirely the way we thought it should be, I intend to support this conference report.

The conference report upholds the House ban on Asat testing.

The prohibition on Asat testing extends for as long as the Soviets refrain from similar Asat testing. Such a mutual moratorium represents a major step toward averting an arms race in space and demonstrates congressional support toward improving the climate of negotiation between the United States and the Soviet Union in the space area.

For the past several years, the Committee on Foreign Affairs has monitored and evaluated the President's antisatellite [Asat] weapons policy. Under my chairmanship, the Subcommittee on Arms Control, International Security and Science has conducted an extensive series of hearings to investigate the arms control implications of the Asat testing program. The subcommittee, 2 years ago, issued an interim report which included an evaluation of the administration's Asat policy. It was evident to us at that time and remains so today, that Asat's, which are specifically designed to destroy satellites, would seriously inhibit our ability to verify current and prospective arms control agreements.

Specifically, the conference language provides that no funds can be expended for testing an Asat against an object in space unless the President certifies to the Congress that the Soviets have conducted a similar Asat test. The fact that the conferees retained the House position banning Asat testing marks a congressional commitment to strengthen the President's hand at the Geneva arms control negotiations. By making the suspension of United States Asat testing contingent upon the continued suspension of Soviet Asat testing, we foster an environment in Geneva conducive to averting an extension of the arms race into space.

Regarding the issue of binary nerve gas weapons, the conferees agreed not to approve funds for the production and procurement of these weapons during fiscal year 1986.

The original House appropriations position not only eliminated funds from being spent on binary weapons production but also eliminated funds from being spent on military construction of chemical weapons production facilities. However, the conference compromise allows funds to be spent for military construction of facilities related to the chemical weapons program.

The conferees eliminated funding for the production of the Bigeye bomb because of persistent failures in the testing program resulting in the GAO, as recently as last week, recommending again that Congress not fund the Bigeye binary production program.

The conference compromise also prohibits all funds for the production of the 155-millimeter binary nerve gas artillery shell during fiscal year 1986. The compromise, however, allows $21.7 million for production of this artillery shell after fiscal year 1986 with the condition that our NATO allies formally approve the need for the production of such a weapon. This means that binary production after fiscal year 1986 is not final or automatic. Ultimately, actual binary production is dependent upon:

NATO agreement to base binary weapons on the soil;

Independent assessment by GAO that binary weapons are technically ready for production and operationally safe; and Assurances that chemical weapons nonproliferation and arms control objectives are not undermined.

This last point takes on added significance in view of the joint pledge made at the summit last month by President Reagan and Secretary-General Gorbachev to actively seek an agreement on the nonproliferation and elimination of chemical weapons.

While not as conclusive as many of us would like, the conference position on chemical weapons reaffirms Congress position that we should not be funding a weapons system that does not work, is not proven safe for our troops, needlessly adds billions of dollars to the deficit, disrupts the NATO alliance, and undermines joint efforts of the superpowers to eliminate chemical weapons.

Mr. PORTER. I thank the gentleman for his remarks. Our House conferees took a vote in the conference. By 15 to 6, they sent a message to the Senate that they insisted on the House position against funding of chemical weapons production. It is the intransigence of the other body that is the cause of this problem, and prevailed over the responsible House position, refusing to spend for a new weapon that clearly is not needed.

Mr. CONTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PORTER. I yield to my good friend and ranking member.

□ 1230

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity also to commend the gentleman from Illinois.

I was 1 of the 15 who voted that way. As you will notice in the conference, I excepted on that provision. Unfortunately, we did not prevail, but tomorrow is another day.

Mr. PORTER. I thank the gentleman for his fight on that issue. He certainly did a marvelous job, as all our House conferees did in behalf of the House position.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEHMAN], a member of the committee.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report. The transportation section of this conference report would provide a total spending level of $25.483 billion for transportation programs for fiscal year 1986. This is comprised of $10.456 billion in new budget authority and $15.027 billion in contract authority obligation limitations.

Mr. Speaker, this total spending level is $1.778 billion, or about 6.5 percent, below the fiscal year 1985 level. It is a reduction that I wish we did not have to make, but I think is necessary given the fiscal realities of our budget. And let me add that unlike the transportation budget submitted by the President, the "pain" is distributed as fairly and evenly as possible—aviation, maritime, and highway programs have all shared the burden with mass transit, Amtrak, and Federal workers.

I know the Members are interested to know about the minimum drinking age amendment added by the Senate. The conferees agreed to strike that provision—it is not in this conference report.

Mr. Speaker, the transportation section of the conference report also is substantially under the committee's section 302(b) allocation made pursuant to the budget resolution. We have gone the extra mile to continue our vital transportation programs and still contribute toward overall fiscal restraint. It deserves your support.

I insert at this point in the RECORD a table giving the conference figures in detail:

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DIXON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, on December 16 the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEHMAN] and I engaged in a colloquy concerning Metrorail. I wonder if the interpretation of the gentleman of those remarks is still the same.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Yes, they certainly are.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to just address the defense issue alone in the CR. First of all, I would like to pay tribute to Chairman ADDABBO, acting Chairman CHAPPELL who did an outstanding job in Mr. ADDABBO's absence, ranking member JOE MCDADE, and all the members of the subcommittee who participated in the conference in its initial stages. Of course some of us were left off in the later part. But actually I felt that we had brought together a magnificently crafted compromise on Monday night. I was very disappointed when the House voted it down overwhelmingly and sent it back to conference. I tried to get those who believed in the compromise we had crafted, tried to inform the Members that it was indeed a very delicate compromise, and for those people truly concerned about defense we tried to tell them that it was not going to get any better when it went back to the new conference. In fact, it did not. The whole issue for the people who believe in a strong national defense can be disappointed that the bill that we have now is not as good as it was Monday night. But unfortunately we were defeated. The process worked its will. The conference went back in without some of us as members of the conference, and we come back with a new compromise. It is not as good as it was. There is no Asat prohibition on the moratorium, and the provison is not any more improved than it was Monday night. Some of us warned, as I said, that the bill would not get any better. It has not because the budget authority is now $1.3 billion less than it was Monday night. The Pentagon reserves of $6.3 billion are now fenced whereas they were not before. There is a defense procurement provision in the bill where none existed. I happen to believe that is an unwise provision.

Again there is still no Asat change in what the bill provided on Monday night.

On the positive side, however, and this is the reason why I support the bill today, there is still $4 billoin more than the 1985 levels. That represents almost a complete zero growth, actually it is 1 percent less than zero real growth when you count inflation. This is $2.75 billion for SDI; $126 million for facilities for starting up the production of chemical weaponry even though production is fenced until 1987. There is $20 billion for increased National Guard and Reserve strength and $475 million extra for Coast Guard and drug interdiction facilities. The administration has signed off on this compromise even though it is not as good as we had on Monday.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge Members on the conservative side of the aisle to go ahead and adopt this bill because if we do not, if it goes back to conference, sure as heck it is going to be worse than it is from our perspective.

I urge adoption of this CR.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH], a member of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, here we are at the end of another year and there is criticism about a great big continuing resolution, and there should be. Perhaps this is a good time to examine why we are here. Most of the criticism is centered on the defense part of this continuing resolution. That was the main criticism Monday night when the resolution failed to pass.

Well, why do we come here at the end of the year with the defense bill in this continuing resolution? To start with, the authorizing committee of the Congress did not start working on an authorization for fiscal year 1986 until the beginning of this year. The authorization should have been adopted before October 1, 1984. The Department of Defense, therefore, was permitted to submit an appropriation request that was based on their idea of what an authorization ought to be. They were not required to abide by guidelines that had been established by the Congress.

They do not yet have an authorization for fiscal year 1987. Therefore, the Department of Defense is preparing a budget request for fiscal year 1987 based on their own ideas, with no guidelines in an authorization developed and passed by Congress.

The Congress was supposed to have adopted a budget resolution by last May 15. There was no agreement with the Senate on a budget resolution by that date so instead of going ahead with the House-passed resolution, the House waited for a month with the idea that such a delay was going to help get a joint budget resolution agreed to when an agreement with the Senate was not accomplished by July, we finally proceeded on the basis of the House-passed resolution, and that was working pretty well with appropriation bills advancing on a basis of a freeze overall, including defense. However, on August 1 we were presented with a budget resolution from the conference committee that was not based upon the House-passed budget resolution. Instead, it increased the military function by $10 billion over the level in the House-passed resolution and over last year's level. At that time 50 or 60 Members supported that joint resolution to increase the military $10 billion, who came in here Monday night and complained and voted against the continuing resolution because the Appropriations Committee had only been able to cut the increase they had voted for to a $5 billion increase. That is inconsistent.

Let us learn a lesson from what happened this year.

The authorization committee for the Department of Defense should start their hearings as soon as possible for the fiscal year starting next October. They are already a year late for fiscal year 1987. They should have a bill on the floor by May 1. If it is not passed by May 1, how can they expect the Appropriations Committee to do its job and have a bill on the floor in June? It cannot be done. The authorization should be the first thing. Then in May and June we should finish the appropriation bills in the House. If we will follow the procedures that are laid down in the Budget Act and in the House rules instead of delaying and delaying and delaying, waiting on authorization bills, we can avoid a big continuing resolution, including defense next year. If we do not meet the prescribed procedures, we will be back here again a year from now in the same kind of situation.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to my good friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA].

Mr. REGULA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

My colleagues, I just want to say to you that while there may be things in this continuing resolution that each of us can find fault with, on balance it is a good compromise. It represents a balanced approach to our responsibilities.

It is about $4 billion under 1985 levels. This is, I think, a substantial achievement to reduce spending levels under 1985 and certainly is going in the right direction.

On the Interior section, I would point out that the House prevailed in the sense that on the clean coal provision we have provided for a $400 million 3-year program to develop clean-coal technologies. In the original bill the House supported this by a vote of 3 to 1. So we are pleased that we could retain it.

I think it is a good provision. Coal is the greatest energy resource this Nation has.

Under this provision, those that want to participate with the Federal Government in programs have to put up a 50-percent match. That means that of course they will have to commit a lot of their own resources to address this problem. But it will help us in burning coal to avoid the acid rain problem that confronts many areas of the country, and confronts our relationship with Canada. I think that is a very important element in the bill. Many will be thankful in the years to come that we have taken the initiative to make our resource of coal available as a primary energy source in an environmentally safe way. This bill provides

The other thing I would mention is that there is $7.5 million in here for a cost-shared steel initiative, and it will again motivate research to allow steel to be produced in a more energy-efficient way. Again, this is one of the great areas of potential progress in our industrial economy, in terms of conserving energy to develop ways to use it more efficiently.

We have dealt with the problem of parks, public lands, and the national forests in a very responsible way.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], a member of the committee.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, this is a good conference report. I urge the House to accept it.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to bring to the floor the conference report on the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations bill for fiscal year 1986 as contained in House Joint Resolution 465. As you know, when the conference committee reconvened on December 18, 1985, we were informed of the administration objections to the Interior bill. As a result of these objections, and in order to maintain operation of the Government, I reluctantly agreed to an across-the-board reduction of $51,000,000 or 0.6 percent of the total bill.

The total of the bill, when reflecting this reduction, is $8,097,121,000. This is $140,976,000 less than the House passed version of this bill and $22,013,000 lower than the bill as reported by the Senate Appropriations Committee. This bill is approximately $400,000,000 below the 302(b) allocation.

I know an issue of importance to many of you is the disposition of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. Although changes to the original conference agreement with respect to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation were discussed, absolutely no changes were made.

This means that with the exception of funds for clean coal technology and SFC closeout costs, all SFC funds are rescinded. The Board of Directors may not make any additional legally binding awards or commitments for financial assistance as of the date of enactment of this act. The Directors must terminate their duties and be discharged within 60 days of enactment.

It should be noted that the managers have included $500,000 for planning for the Playalinda Beach Road at Canaveral National Seashore. The funds are to be derived from the Federal Highway Lands Program.

Mr. Speaker, this conference report continues important programs necessary for the protection and enhancement of our unsurpassed natural resources to pass along to our children and the coming generations, while maintaining fiscal responsibility and providing substantial return to the Treasury. I urge the adoption of this conference report presented to you today. I am inserting a table which reflects the across-the-board reduction on the programs contained in the Interior bill.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING] has asked me to engage in a colloquy with him, and I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on what I think is an unwise provision hidden in this legislation, and to engage my friend and colleague Mr. YATES in a brief colloquy about it.

I am speaking of the provision in this continuing resolution which was inserted by the other body and which would transfer the Animal Damage Control [ADC] Program from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service of the Department of the Interior to the Department of Agriculture.

This is clearly legislation in an appropriations bill. It has not had a hearing of any sort in the House. It was not considered by the relevant House legislative committees and subcommitees. When the other body tried to add it to authorizing legislation—the farm bill—the House conferees rejected it.

To the basic concern about failure to adhere to the normal legislative process must be added concern over this proposal's far-reaching substantive implications.

Over the years, the Congress has built a considerable body of law governing the management and control of a wide variety of wildlife, including occasionally depradating species. In 1939, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service of the Department of the Interior was made responsible for controlling depradating species through the ADC Program.

Though often beset with funding problems, the Fish and Wildlife Service has developed extensive programs, qualified personnel, special expertise, and appropriate policy on this subject matter. All of that will be put in jeopardy if the program is transferred.

We are unable to learn of any thought having been given to the legal or operational ramifications of this transfer, or to the impact it will have on wildlife. The mammals and birds that sometimes conflict with agriculture—the control of which is the purpose of the ADC program—are important components of natural ecosystems. Many of them are classified as game species and protected by the laws of various States. They include the bobcat and mountain lion, geese and ducks, and many others.

If done improperly, control of these animals endangers other species, including eagles, hawks, and many other species—including many that are rare and endangered, and migratory species that the Secretary of Interior is obligated to protect by international treaties with Canada and Mexico.

The sole agency in the Federal Government qualified by law, experience, and tradition to manage the ADC Program is the Fish and Wildlife Service. they are the only Federal agency that is immersed in the whole body of law affecting Federal management of wildlife. The Department of Agriculture has neither the personnel, experience, or the orientation to do this job and do it right.

Furthermore, the Fish and Wildlife Service has cooperative management agreements with State wildlife agencies to secure the assistance of the States in the ADC Program. Most States contribute funds as well as personnel. Does transferring the ADC Program abrogate those agreements? It's quite possible.

At this time, I would like to ask the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, Mr. YATES, if he can assure me—on behalf of the Appropriations Committee—that transfer of this program is not intended to result in short-cutting of environmental standards or wildlife management professionalism in the ADC Program:

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is "yes."

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, I thank the gentleman, and I will ask this question:

And can the gentleman assure me that the agency, as transferred, will be held strictly accountable for compliance with the Endangered Species Act, the Migratory Bird Treaty Acts, and the laws and regulations pertaining to the use of poisons?

Mr. YATES. The answer to that is "yes."

Mr. SEIBERLING. And will the gentleman give us his help in monitoring the agency, to make sure we do know what effect this transfer turns out to have, so that if it turns out to have reduced the professionalism, efficiency, or compliance with the law of this program, he can help see that it is transferred back to where it came?

□ 1245

Mr. YATES. The gentleman has my complete assurance about that.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much for that assurance.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, may I say to my friend, the gentleman from Ohio, that on this matter that we have before us, we have two distinct types of areas. I would be the first to say that Interior and Agriculture should get together for a division of responsibility. Certainly we have no desire whatever to interfere with what my friends are for. By the same token, we have areas where it is entirely destructive to those engaged in agriculture. Certainly there should be a division of responsibility so that both ends may meet. I do not know what we can do about that, but I assure you I will cooperate.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question on that?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. I thank the chairman for his clarification of the purpose. I think it would be well to split up the responsibilities and to maintain in the Department of the Interior certain of the responsibilities respecting these programs.

Mr. WHITTEN. The gentleman and I will work together.

Mr. YATES. We will work it out.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. SKEEN].

Mr. SKEEN Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with the chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING]. In also having a great interest in this particular issue, I assure you that I also would like to lend my good office, or whatever, and interest, in seeing that those objectives that you have outlined are reached and maintained in this change of administrative function. I would assure you that you certainly have my support in that regard, even though I was very much for it.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SKEEN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. It is my understanding that all of the funding for this program, that this resolution transfers it all from Interior to Agriculture; is that correct?

Mr. SKEEN. That is correct, in my understanding.

Mr. SEIBERLING. So what happens to the personnel who have been experienced in this field? Will they also be transferred?

Mr. SKEEN. I am assured that there will be a smooth transition. What that means I cannot tell you at this point.

Mr. SEIBERLING. How will they work together if they have no funds in the Interior Department for this purpose?

Mr. SKEEN. I would say to the gentleman that the best source of information for that would be the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, in response to the concerns raised by the gentleman from Ohio, I want to tell him that I tried to raise the issue of the Animal Damage Control Program once again with my fellow conferees. Unfortunately, I was unable to get agreement to reopen the debate on the issue of the program transfer.

As the gentleman knows, the transfer from Fish and Wildlife over to the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service was requested by Secretary Hodel of Interior and Secretary Block of Agriculture. The Office of Management and Budget urged our conferees to accept the Senate language which provided $20 million and the transfer.

Our committees have heard from a number of organizations including the National Association of State Departments of Agriculture also in support of the move.

May I say to the gentleman that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has no greater support than this Member, and the gentlemen who serve on the Interior Subcommittee overseeing its operations—Chairman SID YATES and ranking member, RALPH REGULA. We have been fighting for years to secure funds for this agency to enable it to continue its important work for the preservation, protection and cultivation of our precious natural resources,

The Service has done an outstanding job with the ADC Program—in fact they have been of invaluable assistance to the New England Farm Center in my own district, where work has been underway to protect livestock from predators like coyotes and the eastern timber wolf. This work will continue, let me assure the gentleman. The Department of Agriculture will continue this and all important animal damage control work. And I will work with the gentleman to ensure that they do so.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN].

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, here we are again, with a bill that is designed to resolve major differences between this body and the other body and the Chief Executive. That bill is called a continuing resolution. It is necessary every year. Of course, it is a compromise. That is what a continuing resolution is all about.

But I want to congratulate the gentleman from Mississippi, the chairman, and the distinguished ranking minority member, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], for the long hours that they worked and that all of the conferees worked to craft this compromise. It is a good compromise and it is a good bill. It has things in it that are important to every single congressional district in this country and every single Member of this body.

In the transportation section, I want to say to the distinguished chairman, Mr. LEHMAN, we have crafted a good compromise. The funding is there for mass transit and to keep Amtrak running, to keep the Coast Guard Drug Interdiction Program going, for aviation safety, programs that are important to everyone in this country.

The defense section was particularly difficult, and I congratulate Chairman ADDABBO, Acting Chairman CHAPPELL, and my colleague, JOE MCDADE, for the work that they did in this area.

I am pleased that it includes a ban on the testing of antisatellite weapons against an object in space that was originally cosponsored by my colleague from California, Mr. BROWN, and I, and passed this body and is included in this bill. I thank Messrs. AUCOIN and DICKS for their labors in this area.

It is a good bill, Mr. Speaker, it is one that I hope all of you sitting here and that those of you who are watching this out there will support, because it is necessary to conclude the business of this body. It is a good bill because it is important to each and every one of your congressional districts and important to each and every person in this land.

The committee has done an outstanding job, in my belief, and I hope the bill will receive the hearty support of the House.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COUGHLIN. I yield to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman mentioned the Coast Guard. I fought very strenuously in the conference against cutting the Coast Guard another $50 million in procurement. But I want the House to know that the Coast Guard made out well out of that because we were able to put $140 million more into the Coast Guard procurement account in the defense bill, making that about $375 million in the defense bill for procurement for the Coast Guard. So even though they took $50 million out, we put another $140 million in defense.

Mr. COUGHLIN. I think we all owe a debt of gratitude to the gentleman from Massachusetts for making sure that our Coast Guard and our drug-interdiction program and that those programs that are so very necessary do continue on, as is true with aviation safety and so many other programs which are critical.

Mr. CONTE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CHAPPELL], and at this time I would like to compliment him on the fine job he has done, and also to say how proud we are to have our good friend, the gentleman from New York, JOE ADDABBO, back in action.

Mr. CHAPPELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the distinguished chairman and ranking minority member of the full committee and all of the subcommittee chairmen and their counterparts and all of the members of the conference for the tremendous support which they have given to the defense portion involved in this resolution. I also want to say, too, that we appreciate so much the excellent work of a tremendous staff in our endeavors. I especially want to commend our chairman, Mr. ADDABBO, for his participation under rather trying circumstances, and Mr. MCDADE, especially, my counterpart in this endeavor, for all of his help.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, this is a good bill, an outstanding bill. It is one of the most delicately balanced bills I have ever had the opportunity to work with. We brought this bill down to the point where if one major item fell out the whole resolution would fall. We put together a package on Asat where we have maintained the House position prohibiting the test of any weapon against an object in space. We fully funded the authorized level for SDI of $2.750 billion. We compromised at a funding level of $281.2 billion, and we included restricted provisions which I think everyone can live with regarding binary chemicals.

I want to take just a moment, if I might, on the binary chemical issue.

The conference agreement includes $126 million for production of binary chemical weapons and related production facilities. Of this amount: $21.7 million is for production of the GB-2 155mm artillery projectile; $6 million is appropriated in research, development, test, and evaluation for procurement of components for additional Bigeye bomb operational testing; $98.3 million is for Bigeye production facilities and components for prove out.

However, all of these funds are subject to legislative restrictions contained in section 8093 of the conference agreement.

None of the funds may be obligated until certain requirements are satisfied concerning NATO consultation, such as submission of a force goal to NATO and adoption of it by the North Atlantic Council; a deployment plan, developed in consultation with the Supreme Allied Commander, Europe; consultation with NATO allies on the deployment plan; and the President must certify to Congress that the above three requirements have been met.

Even after the above conditions have been met, none of the funds included for Bigeye testing components may be obligated until the Secretary of Defense submits a report to Congress describing Bigeye operational requirements; Bigeye performance with respect to these requirements; and any exceptions to the requirements which are deemed acceptable by the Department of Defense.

Report language will make it clear that GAO will review and certify this report and that the Department shall cooperate with GAO in reviewing and monitoring the Bigeye program.

None of the funds for GB-2 artillery projectile procurement may be obligated before October 1, 1986.

Final assembly of the GB-2 may not take place until October 1, 1987, and then only if the following conditions are met:

A mutually verifiable international agreement has not been entered into.

The President must certify that: Final assembly is necessitated by national security and NATO interests; handling and storage safety specifications of the Department will be met or exceeded; Federal safety requirements for handling storage and other use of the munition will be met or exceeded; and a plan for destroying the existing stockpile is ready for implementation.

The Secretary must have a plan for storing of the components in separate States.

The Secretary must have a plan for separate transportation of the components.

I must emphasize that the purpose of these restrictions is twofold:

To try to give every incentive and opportunity for serious negotiations on banning these weapons; and

To assure that if production is necessary it is done safely.

What we are trying to do here is to get the Soviets to the bargaining table where we can do something regarding chemical warfare. We must understand we are not talking about an issue of whether or not we favor chemical warfare. That is not the issue. All of us, of course, despise chemical warfare, as we do every other kind of war. But what we are trying to do in this resolution is to give us an opportunity to get the Soviets to the table and to give us a reasonably safe weapon system, when it does come, if we do get to that point.

Procurement reform was another issue we addressed.

After much debate, the conferees included a provision concerning allowable costs. The fiscal year 1986 Authorization Act substantially tightening the criteria under which costs are charged to DOD contracts. The act eliminated items like country club dues, alcoholic beverages, souvenirs, dog kennels, et cetera.

The appropriation conference strengthens the authorization in two key areas:

DOD is now required by law to have Armed Services and Government Operations Committees review its policy regulations prior to publication. The provision allows Congress to participate in the process. It ensures strict compliance with congressional intent.

GAO is required to evaluate DOD policies on a recurring basis to ensure total elimination of unallowable costs in DOD procurement. Reports are required to be submitted to Congress on effectiveness of DOD policies, actual elimination of unallowable costs, and recommendations for future policy or legislative changes. The provision keeps the heat on until the problem is solved.

The conferees considered, but did not adopt, a proposal to make the costs disallowed under one cost principle unallowable under all cost principles because DOD is already implementing this GAO policy recommendation.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the passage of this resolution.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to my good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCDADE].

Mr. MCDADE. I thank my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to join with my distinguished colleague from Florida in urging the House to pass this bill. As we all know, it contains all the funding for the Department of Defense for the next fiscal year.

In my opinion, as my colleague from Florida has said, it is highly and delicately balanced. I have been a Member of the body for 12 terms now, and in all that time I have never been in a more arduous conference. I want to pay tribute to my friend from Florida for his stewardship of this committee as we tried to deal with those various interests. I want to pay tribute to my friend, JOE ADDABBO, and, of course, the senior member of the committee, the ranking chairman, JAMIE WHIT-

TEN, and my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts. All of us worked together to bring back a bill that is eminently supportable.

How supportable is it? The administration supports this bill and has gone on record as doing so. Our colleagues on both sides of the aisle support this. All of the Members who are conferees support the bill and ask you to pass it.

Let me say to you if we are forced to go back to meet with the Senate, things are only going to get worse. From any aspect, things are only going to deteriorate. Those issues, delicate, difficult issues, Asat, SDI, chemical warfare, the level of funding for the next fiscal year, the impact of the transfers, all of them stand to come unraveled and may not once again be put back together. Let me remind you, those of you who were interested in Asat, that the Senate was that close to receding, which would have made funds available for testing in our fiscal year 1985 dollars.

Let me remind you that we had a one-vote margin, at one point, on the agreement that was reached on binary weapons. That could go back and fall apart without any difficulty. In my opinion, if we had not worked together as a committee, if we had not worked together as a group, this bill would not be here.

This is the last chance for all of us to coalesce and be around a bill that is supported broadly by both sides of the aisle. We have made reductions in numbers, we have nailed down the transfer acccount for you, and late last night my friend from Florida and I went up to the Senate gallery and met with Senator GOLDWATER and my dear friend from Indiana, Senator QUAYLE, and we persuaded them, finally, to give something to our colleagues on the other side of the aisle who were so interested in procurement reform. We accomplished all of that.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, last night we completed the most difficult conference I have been involved with in my 12 terms in the House. This was not only because of the sheer volume of differences between the House and the other body on defense, which had taken days to work out, last week; but also, by the necessity of having to reopen the defense portion of the conference as a result of the House's action Monday night.

As we went back into the continuing resolution conference it was apparent that many Members, mostly from the majority, were not pleased with the conference agreement primarily due to several misunderstandings about our negotiations and our conference agreements.

It was clear that we had to address these misunderstandings, which concerned three issues: Our treatment of $6.3 billion worth of unobilgated balances, which incorrectly had been portrayed as some kind of a Gramm-Rudman slush fund, or cushion; second, our overall dollar figure; and finally, procurement reform.

We felt obliged to bring back a defense bill which addressed these problems, but by attempting to bring them up, we threatened to unravel the entire defense bill, as well as the entire conference, since our original package was very delicately crafted and negotiated.

Mr. Speaker, we nearly lost the entire defense agreement several times yesterday—but because of the strong voice of our chairman, JOE ADDABBO, and my good friend from Florida, BILL CHAPPELL, we kept the conference from falling apart and in doing so, brought a defense bill which more than addresses the concerns heard here Monday night.

The report before you contains $281.2 billion in new budget authority for the Defense Department. This is $4.3 billion below both the budget resolution and the defense authorization bill, and is a total of $1.3 billion less than the bill we brought to the floor on Monday. For those of you used to thinking of defense in terms of the 050 function, this equates to a total of $297.5 billion.

With respect to the transfer accounts—what has been unfairly and incorrectly called a honeypot, a slush fund, and heaven knows what else—I fully concur with the explanation given by my chairman. Let me just go on record as saying there was no subterfuge here, no games being played, despite all the accusations that we were building in a Gramm-Rudman hedge.

We had provided these moneys in order to provide for several important issues which in all likelihood would need funding early next year such as military pay and retirement. These funds were fenced—subject to subsequent congressional action. However, to address the concerns of the House we have, in essence, raised the fence and made it stronger—these funds are now even more specifically earmarked, in the bill, and cannot be used for Gramm-Rudman purposes.

Finally, a few words on procurement reform, my colleagues, our counterparts from the other body were not even authorized to negotiate on the subject, as they viewed it as an issue for the armed services committees. It was only after a direct appeal late yesterday to the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, Senator GOLDWATER, that we were able to address this issue that the House feels so strongly about, as a result, our conference report contains the so-called allowable cost reform advocated by the House.

Mr. Speaker, like all conference reports there are some issues in this bill that did not turn out the way I would like. However, this is a good bill, which makes a strong contribution to our Nation's defense.

I strongly urge a yes vote on the conference report.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY], a member of the committee.

Mr. OBEY. I thank the chairman for the time.

Mr. Speaker, I simply rise to inform the Members of the foreign assistance levels in the bill. The Senate bill was $1.1 billion above the House bill. It was $700 million above the President. The conference held foreign operations spending to a figure $7 million below the President's budget and $3.4 billion below last year, which nets out at a 15-percent reduction below last year's overall level in the foreign aid section of the bill.

I think the reductions are fairly balanced.

I wish to briefly summarize the foreign assistance portion of the continuing resolution before us.

I believe that the House position has done very well in the final conference agreements.

The Senate position was $1.1 billion above the House and exceeded the President's request by over $700 million.

We have been successful in significantly decreasing those amounts.

The conference agreement now provides $724.5 million less than the Senate level and is below the President's request by $7 million.

This final total is $3,401.8 million below the 1985 levels—not including the one-time emergency assistance supplementals to Africa and the Middle East.

We have provided $1,110 billion for the Ex-Im Bank while still staying under the President's total for the entire foreign operators section.

The House has also prevailed in striking Senate section 523 which removed all authorization committee earmarks, ceilings, and unconditional prohibitions.

CONFERENCE COMPARED TO HOUSE AND SENATE LEVELS

In the area of military assistance, the conference added $148.4 million to the House level while cutting the Senate level $255.8 million. This result is $670.5 million below the President's request, while still providing full funding for Israel, Egypt, and Pakistan.

In the area of the economic support fund, the conference provided $10.7 million above the House level and $45 million below the Senate level. This result is $324 million below the President's request and is $126 million below 1985 levels.

In the area of the international financial institutions, the conference included the banking authorization provisions as they passed the House and we provided $75 million for the special facility for sub-Saharan Africa. In total, for the development banks, the conference provided $376.8 million above the Senate position and $99.6 million below the House position.

In the nonbank development assistance accounts, the conference provided $34.3 million above the House position and $110.5 million below the Senate level including full funding for the Peace Corps and the Inter-American Foundation.

ISRAEL AND EGYPT

The conferees have earmarked funds for Israel and Egypt at the fiscal year 1986 administration request level. Under the conference report, Israel will receive $1.8 billion in FMS and $1.2 billion in ESF for a total security assistance program of $3 billion. Egypt will receive $1.3 billion in FMS and $815 million in ESF for a total security assistance program of $2.15 billion.

PAKISTAN

The conferees have earmarked assistance to Pakistan at the fiscal year 1986 administration request level. Pakistan will receive $250 million in ESF and $325 million in FMS for a total security assistance program of $575 million in fiscal year 1986.

PHILIPPINES

The conferees have agreed, due to recent developments in the Philippines, to provide for military assistance program and foreign military credit sales assistance below the administration's request and below the amount proposed by the Senate. For economic support funds, we have provided more than requested by the administration and proposed by the Senate. I ask that a chart be placed in the record at this point indicating the funding included for the Philippines.

	Administration request	House	Senate	Conference agreement
ESF	$95,000,000	(1)	$110,000,000	$125,000,000
MAP	50,000,000	$25,000,000	50,000,000	40,000,000
FMS	50,000,000	0	20,000,000	15,000,000

[1] No amount specified.

GREECE/TURKEY

The conferees have stated in report language that military assistance for Greece and Turkey shall be provided only in accordance with a 7-to-10 ratio. The conference agreement earmarks military assistance to Greece and Turkey at a level which reflects both the 7-to-10 ratio and 10-percent reduction from the ceilings set by the Senate. The reduction was made to reflect overall reductions made to the FMS and military assistance accounts. FMS funding for Greece is limited to $450,000,000 and for Turkey to $427,852,000. MAP funding for Turkey is $215,000,000. This will provide a total of $450,000,000 in FMS for Greece and $642,852,000 in FMS and MAP for Turkey.

GUATEMALA

The conferees reviewed several issues concerning United States foreign assistance for Guatemala.

First, the conferees agreed to remove the $12.5 million ceiling on economic support fund activities that had been proposed by the House.

Second, the conferees have agreed to follow the House approach in regard to foreign military sales credits for Guatemala. FMS Guatemala, therefore, will only be provided to Guatemala if: First, the President certifies to Congress that an elected civilian government is in power and has submitted a written request for FMS; and second, the Government of Guatemala has demonstrated progress in the control over military and security forces, in the elimination of kidnaping and disappearances and in the respecting of internationally recognized human rights of its indigenous Indian population. This conference action is consistent with action taken earlier on the Foreign Assistance Authorization Act for fiscal year 1986.

Finally, the conferees have agreed that there shall be no funding for the Rural Resettlement Program in Guatemala except as provided through the notification process of the Committees on Appropriations.

UNICEF

The conferees have provided a total of $53,500,000 to the United Nations Children's Fund [UNICEF], $48,150,000 from the international organizations and programs account and $5,350,000 in unobligated moneys from the economic support fund Lebanon account.

IFAD

The conferees have provided $30 million for a first-year contribution to the second replenishment for the international fund for agricultural development.

CHILD SURVIVAL ACTIVITIES

The conferees have provided a total of $50 million for child survival activities during fiscal year 1986, $25 million in the child survival fund, $12.5 million earmarked in the health, development assistance account and $12.5 million in unobligated moneys for the child survival fund from the economic support fund Lebanon account.

POPULATION

The conferees have provided $250 million for family planning activities overseas. In addition, the conferees directed that these funds be available only to voluntary family planning projects which follow the practice of "informed consent."

MIGRATION AND REFUGEE ASSISTANCE

The conferees have provided migration and refugee assistance at $1 million above the fiscal year 1986 administration request level, or $338,930,000.

LIMITATION ON DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE TO CENTRAL AMERICA

The conferees limited development assistance to Central America to $250 million in fiscal year 1986. This is a $25 million increase over the fiscal year 1985 limitation and is $18.5 million below the administration's request for Central America. Additional funds may be made available above this limit if approved through the notification process of the Committees on Appropriations.

This limitation was continued because of concern by the conferees that with a reduction in development assistance this year, Central America, because of security concerns, would receive a disproportionate share of development assistance at the expense of Africa.

JORDAN

The conferees reviewed the Senate amendments concerning Jordan. In the first, the conferees have removed the $95 million ceiling proposed by the Senate on FMS funds for Jordan.

Second, the conferees have agreed to a Senate amendment which states that any joint resolution introduced on or after February 1, 1986, which states that Congress objects to the proposed arms sale to Jordan shall be considered in the Senate in accordance with the provisions of section 601(b) of the International Security Assistance and Arms Export Control Act of 1976.

CAMBODIAN NON-COMMUNIST ASSISTANCE

The conferees have provided up to $5 million in economic support or military assistance funds for the Cambodian non-Communist resistance forces. Of the $5 million, the conferees agreed to an earmark of $1.5 million in funds that must be used for this purpose. The Senate had earmarked $2.5 million and the House had provided for no earmark.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I ask that a chart listing the conference agreement be placed in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. Speaker, on another subject, I would simply like to reaffirm what others have said. I, for one, for instance, think that the Senate honoraria provision is outrageous, and I think that the military spending in this bill is too high, but I want to assure the Members especially on this side of the aisle that we got virtually everything we could have gotten out of that conference. We have tied down every dollar that we could tie down, and we did reduce spending in that portion of the bill by $1.3 billion.

On another subject, I do want to simply make the point on the issue of the 21-drinking-age mandate. Poor highways do not save lives; you do not save lives by denying the States the ability to improve their highways through Federal highway construction money. I would point out that there are five States in this Union who have a 21 drinking age, but they have absolutely no minimum mandatory penalties for drunk driving. Many of these States that do not have a 21 drinking age have far tougher driving laws than do the States which have a 21 drinking age. And I would urge the Members that if you are going to evaluate a State's performance in the area of highway safety, go across the board, take a look at everything that a State does to try to deal with that problem—do not just take a look at one small, irrelevant piece of the problem; namely, the age at which people can begin to drink.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. NIELSON].

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the assaults that have been made on the Synthetic Fuels Corporation in general and the Seep Ridge project in particular, I feel that it is necessary to say a little bit about that project.

First of all, let me say, regard to this continuing resolution, I object to putting $6.3 billion in defense and leaving it beyond the control of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. I object to the foreign aid provisions being $450 million more than the House approved, and also the preferential treatment given to Isreal and also the Jordan arms restrictions.

Most importantly, I object to the treatment of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. I supported the move 2 years ago to cut $5.5 billion out of that project, and I admit some of the projects early on have been very expensive.

I would like to mention the Seep Ridge project, however. This $184 million project is in direct relationship with what the original intent of that bill was. The sponsors have spent several million dollars prosecuting its proposal before the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, and the Synthetic Fuels Corporation issued a letter of intent in June 1984 and had intended to award this early this year but, because of Indian jurisdiction programs, postponed that.

On December 11, they announced that they would give the intent to approve the Seep Ridge project at that time. This project is environmentally sound, and it is endorsed by several environmental groups. There is no need to dispose of spent shale because it encloses the shale below the surface and burns it, and oil is being produced. It is not an experimental program. Oil is now being produced. All they want to do is to have a production plan of 1,000 to 1,100 barrels per day.

The project does work. It can be applied to enough shale in the country to provide the United States with its total oil needs for 10 years.

Also, as a side issue, if we are talking about economic development, it does help in that area. My district, as I have mentioned, has lost the largest copper mine in the country, it is about to lose the largest western steel company, it has lost uranium business, and it has had serious accidents in the coal industry.

Mr. Speaker, for all these reasons, I support keeping that money in.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND], the ranking member of the committee.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, the 1986 HUD-Independent Agencies Act was signed into law on November 25. We deferred action on one significant item in that bill—EPA's sewer construction grants—because the program was not authorized.

And the program is still not authorized. However, in order to protect essential projects from construction delays, this resolution provides funding for construction grants. The appropriation is $2.4 billion, $600 million of which is to be made available immediately under the current formula. After the Clean Water Act amendments are enacted, we will release the remaining $1.8 billion in a subsequent appropriations bill.

The bill language also directs that these funds be made available to the States immediately for all projects eligible under the law. This will protect the program from tinkering by OMB.

So, Mr. Speaker, this resolution does meet the critical funding needs of the construction grants program.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to engage the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], the chairman of the Interior Appropriations Subcommittee, in a colloquy. I strongly support the funds for clean coal and want to assure that these activities will be coordinated with the Environmental Protection Agency's work in Limestone Injection Multistage Burner [LIMB] technology. The 1986 HUD bill provided $5 million for EPA to demonstrate LIMB in a tangential boiler—which is about half the Federal cost of a 200-megawatt project. Because of the potential for overlap and duplication, I believe that close coordination is needed between EPA and DOE on any LIMB-related work.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND. I yield to the subcommittee chairman.

Mr. YATES. LIMB technology is one concept which would be eligible under the Clean Coal Program, and I would agree that coordination is essential. In fact, I understand that DOE has already requested EPA consultation in the clean coal technology selection process.

Mr. BOLAND. Are there any restrictions on the clean coal funds in this resolution which would prohibit joint DOE-EPA projects in the LIMB area, including co-funding of demonstrations?

Mr. YATES. No; such joint activities are not precluded. In fact, if a joint demonstration is cost-effective and technically feasible, it should be encouraged.

Mr. BOLAND. I am concerned that independent EPA and DOE solicitations for a LIMB demonstration could establish different criteria, create confusion for industry proposals, and result in duplicated effort. Is there anything that would inhibit a coordinated solicitation or a joint solicitation?

Mr. YATES. No, that approach should be considered if it is appropriate.

Mr. BOLAND. I thank the gentleman and look forward to working with him through the 1987 hearing process to assure effective coordination between EPA and DOE in this area.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, how much time do we have left on our side?

The SPEAKER. pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has 12½ minutes remaining and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] has 6 minutes remaining.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I am glad to yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Being one of the Members the other evening who was critical of the conference report, I want to commend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], along with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND], and certainly the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CHAPPELL], for listening very carefully to the request that we had made relative to procurement reform and as it relates to the total numbers. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], listened to us very carefully. I want to thank him, I congratulate him, and I am going to vote in support of this conference report.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my good friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MAVROULES].

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference agreement on the continuing resolution for fiscal year 1986. I predicted a while ago that we would be hearing "Jingle Bells" before this bill became law, and when the House defeated our first conference report the night before last, I couldn't help thinking about the "Night Before Chirstmas." But I believe that we have brought back a bill that all of my colleagues can support, and at this point, I only wish for a "Silent Night," a quick vote, and a rapid adjournment.

Mr. Speaker, we faced a number of difficult issues as we tried to hammer out a conference agreement yesterday. It was clear from the vote of the House on Monday that we needed to make some changes in the Defense section of the bill. In addition, it was clear that if we changed the Defense section, we would also need to make some reductions in the non-Defense sections of the bill in order to obtain the President's signature.

But I have to ask myself: What for? This agreement isn't worth the paper it is printed on. And do you know why that is? Because of that piece of work called Gramm-Rudman. As soon as the Members have digested their eggnog, we will be back here to cut the living day lights out of this agreement. And it is not going to be SILVIO CONTE or JAMIE WHITTEN or others running the show—it is going to be R2D2. I don't know if you saw that picture in the paper this morning, with GRAMM, RUDMAN, and HOLLINGS holding up T-shirts which said, "In Texas, they call it Gramm-Rudman", "In New Hampshire, they call it Rudman-Gramm", and "In South Carolina, they call it Hollings-Gramm-Rudman." Well, Mr. Speaker, come February, the rest of the country, including Washington, DC, is going to be wearing T-shirts saying, "Who the hell got us into this mess?"

For all the work that is going into this CR, and all the battles over compromises, the end result, now that we have Gramm-Rudman, is that this CR is nothing more than computer fodder for a process that's going to shred this agreement to pieces, and tear up everything anyone thinks they've accomplished.

People think it is bad policy not to have the 1986 appropriations in place 3 months into the fiscal year. Well, now, with Gramm-Rudman, it's going to be March, halfway through the fiscal year, before these issues are settled. And that's the kind of "Good Government" that people are self-congratulating themselves on.

For what it's worth, let me describe the further accommodations in the second conference report: Christmas almost came early last Tuesday night when the Synfuels Board tried to shower gifts on their oil company friends—paid for by the American taxpayer. And in the spirit of Christmas, they tried to be as generous as possible and dole out almost $700 million in new subsidies for two projects.

One project—sponsored by the Union Oil Co. in Colorado—is a $900 million boondoggle that would put most water projects to shame. Even after $400 million in Government commitments, the project is a technological disaster. It hasn't worked in 2 years, and even when it was operational, the project couldn't run continuously for more than 30 hours. It's a multimillion "White Elephant," and the Synfuels Board wants to bail out Union Oil with another $500 million in subsidies. This is not energy security; it's corporate welfare at the expense of the taxpayer.

In an arrogant display of contempt for the will of Congress and the law, these bandits plotted to commit hundreds of millions of dollars before the President signed the short CR containing the Conte prohibition on future spending. Even more incredible is that this action had the approval of the Chief of Staff down at the White House. At a time when he was asking us to cut Coast Guard funding, low-income weatherization, and other important programs down to the bone, he was willing to give $700 million in Government subsidies to oil companies. This closed door dealmaking stinks, and it ruins the credibility of the White House to get spending under control. In my 27 years in this House, I've never seen such arrogance and disrespect on the part of a Federal agency and the White House. It's an insult to this Congress and the American people.

Fortunately, the spending moratorium is now in place, and this continuing resolution would prohibit any new commitments immediately upon enactment. I hope Don Regan has no ideas to delay the signing of the CR to allow the Synfuels Board to act on these projects. It would be morally and ethically wrong, and it would come close to breaking the law.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I am glad to yield to my good friend, the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman for his speech. I want to talk to the gentleman a few minutes about the meaning of some language that was in the Conte prohibition, which says that there shall be no contracts until 12 post meridian tonight. Now, there may be some that feel that 12 post meridian means noon, but all the legislative history that was made in that colloquy refers to midnight. All references in both bodies refer to midnight. Would the gentlemen agree with that?

Mr. CONTE. That is absolutely right. As long as we have been making these continuing resolutions, and I think Chairman WHITTEN will agree, they mean always mean midnight.

Mr. BROYHILL. I also refer to the Government Printing Office Style Manual which was used by our legislative counsel in drafting, and on page 143 it says that 12 post meridian means midnight.

Mr. CONTE. The gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. BROYHILL. I will insert that in the RECORD at this point, as follows:

Excerpt from the U.S. Government Printing Office Style Manual, March 1984, p. 143:

9.54. References to meridian in statements of time are abbreviated as follows:

10 a.m.	12 m. (noon)
2.30 p.m.	12 p.m. (midnight)

9.55. The word o'clock is not used with abbreviations of time. (See rule 12.9b.)

This Manual is used by House Legislative Counsel in drafting legislation. If the purpose of the Conte Motion to Recommit had been to ban Synfuel spending until noon, the language would have been written as "12 meridian."

Mr. CONTE. Let me say also to the gentleman from North Carolina, those waiting at the Synfuels Corporation and if they are listening, and I hope they are, will take this advice. If the corporation is to make awards this afternoon while the Conte prohibition is in effect, they had better be prepared to answer some questions in court. If awards are made today, we will send the marshals down to K Street because they will be breaking the law. It is my clear intention and the clear intention of this body that the Conte provision on the continuing resolution does not expire until midnight tonight.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Mississippi for their work on this bill.

While I am at it, I also want to compliment the gentleman from Massachusetts and say how much we thank him for visible and important help.

Mr. CONTE. Well, let me tell the gentleman, my good friend from Iowa, my classmate, that I thought maybe the folks downtown could not hear me down there. I wanted to make sure they could see me.

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. SYNAR. Is it the gentleman's understanding that projects with legally binding contracts for financial aid from the U.S. Synfuels Corporation would not be affected by this legislation?

Mr. CONTE. Yes; that is my understanding of the conferees' intent.

Mr. SYNAR. What about a project for which the SFC had approved a package of loan guarantees and price supports, but for which no loan guarantee contract had yet been executed. Is it correct that under this legislation, such a project would not be deemed to have a legally binding contract.

Mr. CONTE. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. SYNAR. Finally, what about a project for which the SFC has approved a package of loan and price guarantees, but the sponsors of that project now wish to change the terms of the package previously approved by the SFC. My understanding is that no such changes could be made after the date of enactment of this legislation. Is that correct?

Mr. CONTE. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. SYNAR. I thank the gentleman for these clarifications.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I thank my dear friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts, for yielding to me.

First of all, I want to reinforce what was said. In colloquys on the House floor, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] who serves on the Rules Committee and who was one of the drafters of the amendment referred to, discussed 12 p.m. as meaning midnight.

Mr. CONTE. The gentleman is absolutely right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has expired.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself one additional minute and I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. It is also true that Senator HATFIELD, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee in the Senate, had a similar colloquy in which he referred to the period of 12 p.m. as midnight. Is that not correct?

Mr. CONTE. I am not familiar with the Hatfield colloquy, but I am sure, knowing Senator HATFIELD and knowing that he is familiar with CR's, that he agrees that we always mean midnight.

Mr. DINGELL. I will reinforce the gentleman's statement, because it is a fact that Senator HATFIELD did so refer.

Now, if the gentleman will continue to yield, I would like simply to advise that I have sent a lengthy letter to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, to the chairman, Mr. Noble, in which I said this, which I think is important:

In this connection, we would remind you that the fiduciary responsibility of the directors is to the U.S. taxpayer and not to the stockholders of companies desirous of 11-hour contract.

I asked them later in the same paragraph:

Please provide the Subcommittee with a legal opinion on the potential civil or criminal liabilities which would be assumed by the Corporation's Directors, if the Board were to award a contract arbitrarily, with little or no basis for the decision.

I would simply observe that if that spending of public moneys occurs, it occasions the strong possibility of the assumption of liability under the law on the part of the persons so doing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has again expired.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 additional minute and I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE].

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I want to commend the gentleman in the well for his statement just now and I want to associate myself with his remarks with respect to the absolute arrogance that is being exemplified by the conduct of the Corporation.

One of the points that Members of the body should be alerted to is that the Corporation is absolutely exempt from even Gramm-Rudman, so that if we have any hope of any kind of equality in the treatment of the waste that is going on over there, it is going to be lost the moment those dollars are out the door.

Let me also just say that the Wall Street Journal today is indicating that the President himself is privately urging funding for these programs, at the same time that he is publicly supporting its termination. I hope that report is inaccurate. I think it is unconscionable that the President on the one hand is talking about the need for domestic cuts across the board in the Federal budget, and on the other hand urging privately support for these projects.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert into the RECORD the correspondence between myself and Mr. Noble relative to this matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The correspondence follows:

SUBCOMMITTEE ON OVERSIGHT AND INVESTIGATIONS OF THE COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND COMMERCE, Washington, DC, October 10, 1985.

Hon. EDWARD E. NOBLE,
Chairman, Synthetic Fuels Corporation, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Thank you for your multiple and delayed responses to the August 26 request of the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations. This letter is to express our concern about the incomplete nature of your responses and the present course of business of the U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

The Subcommittee's request for specific project files was based upon our suspicion that the Corporation was planning to move quickly to make substantial financial commitments by finalizing contracts with several applicants. The speed appeared deliberate, so that contracts could be signed and financial commitments made—despite an overwhelming House vote to terminate the Corporation and a request by the Department of Energy that the Corporation hold off on further awards.

The Corporation fully confirmed that suspicion with its approval on September 24th of a $60 million contract for the Forest Hills Project, and preliminary approval of $184 million for the Seep Ridge Project and $500 million for the Union Oil Shale Project—over and above $400 million already committed. Moreover, those decisions strongly suggest that the Board intends to go right on issuing contracts, again despite stated objections from the Secretary of Energy and the House of Representatives—not to mention unprecedented budget deficits.

Documents which the Corporation did submit to the Subcommittee raise several serious questions about the basis upon which the Board is continuing to make contract decisions. The Corporation's file on the Seep Ridge Project, for example, indicates that in June, 1984 the Corporation awarded a letter of intent to the project's sponsors for a maximum of $45 million in Federal assistance. Less than a year later, in May, 1985, the sponsors had requested $129.55 million, a threefold increase, and "evidenced no willingness to negotiate or compromise on the $129.55 [million] figure." By August, a mere three months later, a draft Corporation assistance agreement specified an increase to $147.83 million, with no supporting documentation. Worse yet, and again with no supporting documentation, the Board approved a resolution enabling the Chairman to enter into a contract for $184.34 million. The rise from $45 million to $129 million to $147 million to $184 million amounts to a 300% increase in a scant 15 months! It is disturbing, but not surprising, that the Board would agree to these enormous increases of taxpayer exposure without the benefit of any evaluation or analysis.

The Union Oil Shale project is even more disturbing because of decisions based on a complete lack of credible analysis—at least according to the paucity of information provided to the Subcommittee so far. The Board resolved to amend the existing Union I contract to provide the sponsors an additional $500 million, for a total of $900 million in Federal assistance, and did so relying on 16 pages of staff documents. Nowhere in those few pages is there any evaluation or analysis of the project's technical or financial viability, nor is there any stated justification for a $900 million taxpayer exposure.

Other information provided to the Subcommittee indicates that other projects the directors have been considering for awards would receive subsidies three times greater than estimated project costs while guaranteeing product prices in excess of $150 per barrel! To date the Subcommittee has received no analysis of why such subsidies would be appropriate.

We understand that the Board intends to finalize the Seep Ridge and Union contracts on October 16. It appears that the Corporation is either planning to make commitments of funds with no information on which to base them or else that the Corporation is withholding from the Congress the information it may have.

Therefore, we request that you ensure the Subcommittee that its August 26 request has been fully met. Should additional staff documents "surface," please provide them to the Subcommittee for review prior to any action by the Board or its Chairman to finalize contracts. Please provide the Subcommittee with copies of all notes, memoranda, papers, and documents, including drafts prepared by or for the Corporation's board members with respect to projects for which the Board expects to award assistance during the next three months.

In this connection, we would remind you that the fiduciary responsibility of the directors is to the U.S. taxpayer and not to the stockholders of companies desirous of 11th hour contracts.

The lack of analysis supporting preliminary board decisions on such projects as Union and Seep Ridge, as well as proposed actions on other projects, raise serious questions about the propriety of these decisions. Please provide the Subcommittee with a legal opinion on the potential civil or criminal liabilities which would be assumed by the Corporation's Board Members Directors, if the Board were to award a contract arbitrarily, with little or no basis for the decision. Would such an action constitute a willful misapplication of taxpayer funds? Because of the billions of dollars involved in the potential awards, we request that the legal analysis be submitted to the Subcommittee prior to any action by the Board or its Chairman to finalize contracts.

Furthermore, one legislative proposal under consideration in Congress contains a provision which would result in the abrogation of any contracts the Corporation executes. Although not legally necessary to the workings of the provision, it is only fair to notify potential project sponsors that any contracts they execute with the Corporation could be abrogated without compensation. The attached memorandum outlines the legal basis for such action. We request that you immediately notify all private parties presently involved in negotiations with the Corporation of the possibility of such action and provide them copies of memorandum.

Finally, regardless of the decision of the Congress as to the fate of the Corporation, it is quite possible that the sponsors of individual synfuels projects will abandon those projects prematurely. (An example is the Great Plains project.) We request that before the Board or its Chairman finalizes any countracts, you provide the Subcommittee with information on the exposure of the Federal government in the event of a default by a project sponsor. In addition, we request that you provide a description of the provisions in the proposed contracts which would minimize the loss to the taxpayers in such an event.

If any questions arise, please contact Michael T. Woo at 225-2927.

Sincerely,

JOHN D. DINGELL,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations.

To: Honorable Philip R. Sharp, Chairman, Subcommittee on Fossil and Synthetic Fuels.

From: Subcommittee Staff.

Subject: Constitutionality of Synthetic Fuels Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1985.

Question presented: Is Section 111 of the Synthetic Fuels Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1985, as reported by the Committee on Energy and Commerce on September 18, 1985, constitutional?

Section at issue: The section prohibits the payment of any contract awards made by the Synthetic Fuels Corporation after July 31, 1985, and before enactment, and withdraws the consent of the United States to be sued on any claim arising out of such an award. One such award, to the Forest Hills project, has been made.

The language of the section is as follows:

"SEC. 111. RESTRICTIONS

"(a) USE OF FUNDS.—None of the funds appropriated by section 110 or any other provision of law may be used by the United States Synthetic Fuels Corporation, the Secretary of Energy, or any other agent or officer of the United States for making payments with respect to obligations entered into by the United States Synthetic Fuels Corporation after July 31, 1985, and before the date of enactment of this Act.

"(b) IMMUNITY FROM SUIT.—The United States hereby withdraws any stated or implied consent for the United States, any officer or agent of the United States, or the United States Synthetic Fuels Corporation to be sued by any person with respect to any claim arising out of obligations described in subsection (a)."

Precedents: Among the leading precedents for the proposition that section 111 is constitutional, are Lynch v. U.S., 292 U.S. 571 (1934), and Maricopa County v. Valley National Bank of Phoenix, 318 U.S. 357 (1943).

Equal authority lies in legislation enacted after the ruling in Perry v. U.S., 294 U.S. 330 (1935), one of the so-called "gold clause" cases, which involved the retroactive breach by the United States of its "gold bond" contracts.

Following the decision in Perry, Congress withdrew the consent of the United States to be sued on any claim related to gold clause securities of the U.S. that had been issued in previous years. Despite numerous attacks on that legislation by gold bond holders, it was never held unconstitutional. See, generally, the cases and articles cited in Kauper, Constitutional Law, 1980 ed., pps. 818-819; and Freund, Sutherland, Howe, and Brown, Constitutional Law, Cases and Problems, 4th ed., 1977, pps. 128 et seq., and pps. 317-324, discussing Perry and subsequent cases brought by gold bond holders.

This memorandum reviews these decisions, as well as earlier and later rulings by the Federal courts on the same issue.

Conclusion: Under these rulings, a clear legislative assertion of sovereign immunity is constitutional—even in the face of claims that the assertion leaves a plaintiff with no remedy for a claimed violation of his constitutional rights. These precedents extend to claimed violations of the Fourth, Fifth, Seventh, and Tenth Amendments. I can find no contrary decisions holding unconstitutional a clear withdrawal of "consent to be sued."

Because Section 111 is a clear and unmistakeable assertion of sovereign immunity, and an indisputable withdrawal of the sovereign's previously-granted consent to be sued, it therefore is entirely constitutional, and will be upheld by the courts with respect to contracts such as the SFC's Forest Hills award.

A. Lynch: The Court's opinion, by Justice Brandeis, states:

"The rule that the United States may not be sued without its consent is all embracing . . .

"Although consent to sue was thus given when the policy [of insurance coverage that is the subject of this suit] issued, Congress retained power to withdraw the consent at any time. For consent to sue the United States is a privilege accorded; not the grant of a property right protected by the Fifth Amendment. The consent may be withdrawn, although given after much deliberation and for pecuniary consideration. The sovereign's immunity from suit exists whatever the character of the proceeding or the source of the right sought to be enforced. It applies alike to causes of action arising under acts of Congress, . . . and to those arising from some violation of rights conferred upon the citizen by the Constitution . . . The character of the cause of action—the fact that it is in contract as distinguished from tort—may be important in determining (as under the Tucker Act) whether consent to sue was given. Otherwise, it is of no significance. For immunity from suit is an attribute of sovereignty which may not be bartered away." (Citations omitted.)

B. Maricopa County: In his opinion for the Court (which favorably cites Lynch), Justice Douglas employs equally broad language in rejecting a claimed violation of the Fifth Amendment. The Court notes an earlier ruling that allowed the states to tax RFC shares, which:

". . . was rendered on February 3, 1936. On March 20, 1936, Congress enacted a statute providing that shares of preferred stock of national banks 'heretofore or hereafter acquired by' the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall not, so long as Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall continue to own the same, be subject to any taxation by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or the District of Columbia, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority, whether now, heretofore, or hereafter imposed, levied, or assessed and whether for a past, present, or future taxing period.'. . . On the authority of that Act, the District Court, issued a permanent injunction against the collection [of taxes on the U.S.' shares of RFC stock.]

"Petitioners contend that the Act of March 20, 1936, violates the Fifth and the Tenth Amendments. [The Court rejects the latter claim.]

"The argument that the Act of March 20, 1936, violates the Fifth Amendment is based on its retrospective feature. Petitioners contend that since the liens of the taxes were impressed before the effective date of the Act, they were property rights which Congress could not destroy. We need not consider the case where prior to the withdrawal of the privilege the tax had been collected or the tax lien foreclosed and the property reduced to the possession of the taxing authority.

"In the instant case the state taxing authorities are asserting rights which if recognized can be enforced by the maintenance of a suit to establish and foreclose a lien on property of a federal instrumentality, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. . . . But even a 'proceeding against property in which the United States has an interest is a suit against the United States.'. . . No such suit may be maintained without the consent of the United States. Such consent, though previously granted, has now been withdrawn. And the power to withdraw the privilege of suing the United States or its instrumentalities knows no limitations. Lynch v. United States, 292 U.S. 571, 581-582, and cases cited." (Other citations omitted.)

C. Perry: "When the United States, with constitutional authority, makes contracts, it has rights and incurs responsibilities similar to those of individuals who are parties to such instruments. There is no difference . . . except that the United States cannot be sued without its consent."

D. Additional Rulings:

1. Laycoek v. United States, 9th Cir., 230 F. 2d 848 (1956). Suit against the U.S. for unconstitutional taking of property in violation of the Fifth Amendment, dismissed in view of the Congressional withdrawal of consent to be sued that was enacted after the ruling in the Perry case:

"Upon dismissing appellant's action for want of jurisdiction, the District Court expressed the view that the complaint did not present a case of a taking of property within the purview of the Fifth Amendment.

"We do not reach that question, being of the opinion that consent previously given in the Tucker Act or otherwise to sue the Government on a claim such as asserted by appellant here was expressly withdrawn by the Act of August 27, 1935. . . . This Act provides that: 'Any consent which the United States may have given to the assertion against it of any right . . . in any proceeding of any nature whatsoever . . . upon any claim or demand arising out of any surrender, requisition, seizure, or acquisition of any . . . gold . . . and involving the effect or validity of any . . . regulation of the value of money is withdrawn . . .'

"It appears to us beyond question that in the complaint at bar appellant asserts a claim or cause of action arising out of an alleged 'surrender, requisition, seizure, or acquisition' by the Government of appellant's gold, and 'involving the effect or validity of . . . regulation[s] of the value money'."

"It is axiomatic that: 'Consent alone gives jurisdiction to adjudge against a sovereign.' United States v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. This is so, even in cases grounded upon alleged violations by the Government of Federal Constitutional rights. . . . And it is equally well settled that 'the power to withdraw the privilege of suing the United States or its instrumentalities knows no limitations.' Maricopa County v. Valley National Bank." (Other citations omitted.)

2. Wells v. United States, 5th Cir., 214 F. 2d 380 (1954).

"The United States, in an exhaustive and excellent brief marshalling some of the many authorities uniformly supporting the principle that the United States may be sued only when, as, and in, the court in which it has expressly consented to be used, urges upon us that, absent such express consent, arguments from implications, from convenience and necessity, from considerations of reasonableness and justice, indeed arguments of any kind, except those based on pointing to an express consenting, will not do, that, indeed the very resort to them confesses away the jurisdiction contended for.

"We agree that this is so and that whatever may be said for or against the persistence of the idea of the absolute immunity of the sovereign from suit except on its own terms, the fact, of its persistence may not be questioned nor may its results be escaped." (Citations omitted.)

3. Matya v. United States, 8th Cir., 478 F. 2d 330 (1973), rejecting claimed violation of Fifth Amendment:

"The fundamental difficulty with the plaintiff's case is that she has sued the wrong party. The United States, as sovereign, is immune from suit without its consent . . . . No statute, regulation or order has been cited which shows that the United States has consented to being sued in the situation presented here. In Buck v. United States, 466 F.2d 481, 483 (10 Cir. 1972), the Tenth Circuit dismissed a similar cause of action for lack of jurisdiction saying:

'The United States, as sovereign, may not be sued without its consent and the terms of its consent define the court's jurisdiction. . . . Taxpayers present no claim that any assessment has been paid or that any application for refund has been filed.

'Taxpayers argue that if relief is not granted they will be unable to contest the validity of the penalties and will suffer irreparable harm in violation of their Fifth Amendment rights. We need not explore what remedies the taxpayers might have had or now have because we are concerned with sovereign immunity.'" (Citations omitted.)

4. Pass. v. McGrath, D.C. Cir., 192 F.2d 415 (1951), rejecting claim that taking of property was in violation of thie Fifth Amendment:

"In our opinion there is no merit in appellant's contentions that the statute does not mean what it says and that if it does it is unconstitutional. It is 'well established that suit may not be maintained against the United States in any case not clearly within the terms of the statute by which the terms of the statute by which it consents to be sued.' . . . 'And the power to withdraw the privilege of suing the United States or its instrumentalities knows no limitations, Lynch, and cases cited. Maricopa County v. Valley National Bank of Phoenix. . . . Affirmed."

(Other citations omitted.)

5. Bryan v. United States, 10th Cir., 99 F. 2d 549 (1938), citing Lynch and twenty-one other cases:

"Immunity from suit is an attribute of sovereignty. The United States can only be sued by its own consent clearly given by legislative act. When Congress gives its consent to be sued it does not grant a right, but merely accords a privilege. Statutes granting the right to sue the United States are to be strictly construed. Congress may impose such conditions and restrictions on the right to sue the United States as it deems proper. A suit may not be maintained against the United States in any case not clearly within the terms of the statute by which it consents to be sued. The courts cannot go beyond the letter of such consent.

"The provision of Section 1103, supra, that 'No suit or proceeding shall be maintained in any court for the recovery of any internal revenue tax . . . until a claim for refund or credit has been duly filed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, according to the provisions of law in that regard,' imposes a condition precedent to the right to maintain such a suit or proceeding. Such provision is not merely a statute of limitation, but a condition attached to the right to sue." (Citations omitted.)

6. Pflueger v. United States, D.C. Cir., 121 F. 2d 732 (1943), rejecting claim of Fifth Amendment violation:

"Even if we concluded that the Congressional limitation of remedy to the amount of 'net proceeds', instead of just compensation, was unconstitutional, the effect would be to invalidate the entire statute and to remove all of the provision for remedy under which appellant seeks to proceed. . . . But we need not pass on the point, for the immunity of the sovereign from suit is paramount, even over rights founded on the Constitution.

" 'For consent to sue the United States is a privilege accorded, not the grant of a property right protected by the Fifth Amendment. The consent may be withdrawn, although given after much deliberation and for a pecuniary consideration. . . . The sovereign's immunity from suit exists whatever the character of the proceeding or the source of the right sought to be enforced. It applies alike to causes of action arising under acts of Congress, . . . and to those arising from some violation of rights conferred upon the citizen by the Constitution. . . . immunity from suit is an attribute of sovereignty which may not be bartered away.' Lynch . . .

"We are of opinion, therefore, that Congress having in express and unambiguous language declared that both relief and remedy should be limited to the property coming into the hands of the custodian or if disposed of by him, to its net proceeds and it appearing here that appellant has already received all that Congress said he might sue for and recover, his suit for more cannot be maintained and the argument on constitutionality is beside the point. The Fifth Amendment to the Constitution does not, as appellant assumes in his complaint, of itself confer jurisdiction in the court below to entertain a suit against the sovereign. See Lynch v. United States, supra." (Other citations omitted.)

7. Lichter v. United States, 334 U.S. 742 (1948), rejecting claims that the U.S. could not unilaterally, by statute, rewrite contracts entered into before the enactment of the act which rewrote them. The chief holding:

"The Renegotiation Act is constitutional on its face as authority for the recovery by the United States of 'excessive profits" (less tax credits) realized by private parties in the circumstances of these cases on subcontracts for war goods in time of war with contractors who were also private parties—even in the absence of contractual provisions for the renegotiation of such profits and even as applied to contracts entered into prior to the enactment of the Act, provided final payments had not been made pursuant to such contracts prior to the date of enactment of the original Act. . . .

"The collection of renegotiated excessive profits on a war subcontract is not in the nature of a penalty and is not a deprivation of a subcontractor of his property without due process of law in violation of the Fifth Amendment. . . .

"The Government was entitled to recover excessive profits (less tax credits) from each of the subcontractors in these cases, whether they arose from contracts made before or after the passage of the Act, provided final payments had not been made pursuant to such contracts prior to the date of the original Act. . . .

8. Mine Safety Appliances Co. v. Forrestal, 326 U.S. 371 (1945), dismissing a government contract suit—based upon an "unconstitutional taking" argument—because the sovereign had not consented to the suit:

". . . we assume, as we must for the purpose of disposing of the jurisdictional issue, that appellant's allegations including the one that the Renegotiation Act is unconstitutional are true. . . . The sole purpose of this proceeding is to prevent the Secretary from taking certain action which would stop payment by the government of money lawfully in the United States Treasury to satisfy the government's and not the Secretary's debt to the appellant. The assumption underlying this action is that if the relief prayed for is granted, the government will pay and thus relinquish ownership and possession of the money. In effect, therefore this is an indirect effort to collect a debt allegedly owed by the government in a proceeding to which the government has not consented. The underlying basis for the relief asked is the alleged unconstitutionality of the Renegotiation Act and the sole purpose of the proceeding is to fix the government's and not the Secretary's liability. Thus, though appellant denies it, the conclusion is inescapable that the suit is essentially one designed to reach money which the government owns. Under these circumstances the government is an indispensable party, . . . even though the Renegotiation Act under which the Secretary proposed to act might be held unconstitutional. In short the government's liability cannot be tried 'behind its back.' "

9. Haskins Bros. & Co. v. Morgenthau, D.C. Cir. 85 F. 2d 677 (1936), terming the Fifth Amendment argument "of no consequence" in view of Congress' lack of consent to the suit:

"The bill prays that the court declare section 602½ unconstitutional and grant an injunction forbidding payment to the government of the Philippines and that the $26,000,000 be declared a trust fund and be ordered by the court to be paid to appellant and others similarly situated.

"The case for the appellant has been argued with great skill and ability, and we have given it careful consideration. But we think the conclusion is inescapable that the decree of the lower court dismissing the bill must be affirmed on either of two grounds.

"First. We think the suit is in effect one against the United States. It is brought against the Secretary of the Treasury, the Treasurer, and the Comptroller General in their official capacities. It seeks to compel the payment of money now deposited in the United States Treasury. In this view the United States are necessary parties and, since they have not consented to be sued, the suit against the officers of the United States cannot be maintained. We know of no power in this or any other court to compel the Secretary of the Treasury or the Treasurer of the United States, in a suit brought against them in their official capacities, to pay out money in the treasury in a manner contrary to that directed by Congress. We hold these general principles to be axiomatic:

"First, that an act of Congress is necessary for the withdrawal of money from the public treasury;

"Second, that no suit can be brought to enforce the making of an appropriation;

"Third, that the Secretary of the Treasury and the Treasurer are officers of the United States holding offices established by law; that their duties are to receive and preserve the public money and not to disburse it except conformably to law; . . .

"Fourth, that where an obligation is cast upon a principal and not upon his agent, a court cannot enforce it against the agent as long as he is acting wholly as agent.

"In the instant case it is therefore of no consequence whether the act under which the tax was collected be constitutional or unconstitutional. The fact that the tax has been collected and deposited in the treasury by the collecting officials of the government renders the custodian of the fund impotent to withdraw the money and disburse it unless and until directed to do so by an act of Congress or until the United States shall submit to be sued to determine its disposition."

10. Robinson v. Deal, D.C. Cir., 145 F. 2d 382 (1944), rejecting on the basis of sovereign immunity claims to funds paid by plaintiff cotton farmers under a concededly unconstitutional statute:

"In the facts properly found by the District Court in the trial on the merits it is obvious the suit is one against the United States and, that being true, the correct rule to apply is that stated by us in Haskins Bros. & Co. v. Morgenthau, . . . as follows:

" 'In the instant case it is therefore of no consequence whether the act under which the tax was collected be constitutional or unconstitutional. The fact that the tax has been collected and deposited in the treasury by the collecting officials of the government renders the custodian of the fund impotent to withdraw the money and disburse it unless and until directed to do so by act of Congress, or until the United States shall submit to be sued to determine its disposition.'

"The fact that the fund in the Haskins Bros. case was derived from the imposition of a tax, while here it was from the imposition by Act of Congress of a condition to the sale of cotton produced in excess of allotment, is of no consequence. The controlling principle is based upon the presence of the fund at the time of suit in the Treasury. The fact, found by the District Court, that 'there is no congressional authority for withdrawal of money from the Treasury under the pool appropriation account for paymnent to plaintiffs and intervenors,' leaves the courts without power to interfere.

"In reaching this conclusion, which we think is required by the facts to which we have referred, we are not unmindful of the hardship thus imposed on intervenors and others of their class. The record shows without denial that some hundred thousand or more cotton farmers paid into the Treasury of the United States approximately $22,000,000 under an unconstitutional Act of Congress and that, after a finding of unconstitutionality and a demand for return of the money, the Government denied return and continued to distribute it to other farmers who, in view of the invalidity of the law, had no legal claim to it."

11. U.S., v. Transocean Airlines, Inc., 5th Cir., 386 F. 2d 79 (1967): "The right to participate in a judgement res is altogether different from a cause of action directly against the judgment debtor, We are told that the law of Florida authorizes such a judgment, predicated upon a charging lien, directly against a private debtor. As against the United States, however, we are of the opinion that such a procedure is precluded by the doctrine of sovereign immunity . . .

"Transocean's claim against the United States was brought under the limited consent granted in the Tucker Act. Appellees' claim, on the other hand stems solely from their contract with Transocean, and is dependent upon the law of Florida which allows the transmutation of a lien against a judgment into a judgment against the debtor. The right to sue the United States cannot be granted by State law nor acquired through contractual relationships with third parties. The right can be acquired only by the specific consent of Congress, which is not present here."

12. Young v. Anderson, D.C. Cir. 160 F. 2d 225 (1947), in which the plaintiff unsuccessfully asserted the unconstitutionality of the 1911 Weeks Act, related to timber rights on watersheds of navigable rivers:

". . . we are in agreement with the court below that since the action is clearly one against the United States, it was properly dismissed. Appellant, however, insists that the charge that the Weeks Act is unconstitutional goes to the very marrow of the case and should be decided before we reach the question whether the United States are indispensable parties. But we think the rule is definitely established otherwise. . . ."

13. Commers v. United States, 66 F. Supp. 943 (1946), rejecting a Fith Amendment attack on the draft on the basis of sovereign immunity, Lynch, and the doctrine of the limited jurisdiction of Federal courts:

"In view of the unbroken line of decisions of the Supreme Court and of the Circuit Courts of Appeal from the inception of our government, it does not appear how, at this date, it could be earnestly contended that consent on the part of the United States to be sued is not necessarily to the maintenance of this action. In Lynch, . . . the Supreme Court said: 'The rule that the United States may not be sued without its consent is all-embracing . . . The sovereign's immunity from suit exists whatever the character of the proceeding or the source of the right sought to be enforced. It applies alike to causes of action arising under acts of Congress, . . . and to those arising from some violation of rights conferred upon the citizen by the Constitution, . . . "The United States cannot be sued in their courts without their consent, and in granting such consent Congress has an absolute discretion to specify the cases and contingencies in which the liability of the government is submitted to the courts for judicial determination. . . . Schillinger

"It is too well settled to be the subject of argument that the Federal District Courts have only such jurisdiction as the Congress may give them. All federal courts, other than the Supreme Court, derive their jurisdiction wholly from the exercise of the authority to 'ordain and establish' inferior courts, conferred on Congress by Article III, section 1 of the Constitution. Article III left Congress free to establish inferior federal courts or not as it thought appropriate . . .'"

14. Best Bearings Co. by United States, 7th Cir., 463 F. 2d 1177 (1972):

"It is axiomatic that the United States can be sued only with its consent and that Congress may specify the terms and conditions of such suits as it authorizes."

15. Bailey v. United States, D. Alaska, 201 F. Supp. 604 (1962), rejecting a breach of contract claim against the United States even though the dismissal left the plaintiff without a remedy:

"It is settled that obligations arising out of a contract with a Post Exchange are not liabilities of the United States upon which suit could be instituted. . . .

"These decisions are based upon the case of Standard Oil Co. of California v. Johnson (1942) . . . in which the Supreme Court held that Exchange contracts are solely the obligation of the Exchange, that they are not Government contracts, and that the Government assumes none of the financial obligations of the Exchange. Unfortunately it is also held that there is no right of action upon such contracts against the Exchange, for the reason that the United States has not waived its sovereign immunity as to contract obligations of the Exchange. For this anomaly there appears to be no present remedy."

16. Swiff-Train Company v. United States, 5th Cir., 443 F. 2d 1140 (1971), suit on a contract against a U.S. Army base "guest house", dismissed under the sovereign immunity doctrine, even though it did not involve "appropriated fund" activities:

"Legislative history of this action in the 91st Congress makes it plain that other non-appropriated funds, such as open messes and the guest house here involved, were not to be included along with the exchanges as to withdrawal of sovereign immunity.

". . . the House Judiciary Committee amended this bill to limit the waiver of sovereign immunity to only those contracts made by post exchanges, because as stated in its report, 'the complete removal of sovereign immunity for all (emphasis in original) non-appropriated fund activities would be undesirable . . .' One of the reasons given for the committee's report that the complete removal of sovereign immunity for all non-appropriated fund activities was that, whereas post exchanges are so operated as to have funds available to discharge all liabilities, 'since not every non-appropriated fund activities has sufficient assets to reimburse the United States, the cost of the judgment in some cases would be imposed on the tax payer—a result which is inconsistent with the very concept of non-appropriated fund activities.'. . .

"The statute just referred to, and the clearly expressed Congressional intent, were not available to the trial court at the time of its decision, because the amendment was passed later. We are satisfied that had this congressional expression been available to the trial court it would have decided differently with respect to the claim in issue."

17. Stewart Sand v. Southeast State Bank, W.D. Missouri, 318 F. Supp. 870 (1970), rejecting suit on a contract with the U.S. "implied in law":

". . . it must be concluded that the obligation of the United States on the endorsement of a check or money order, in cases like that at bar, is an implied-in-law contract of the type which is excluded from jurisdiction under the provisions of the Tucker Act. Express contracts and implied-in-fact contracts are agreements of a type wherein the assent of the Government to be sued is indirectly manifested. But a contract implied in law is not the same, and imports a contractual obligation in the absence of intention to be bound. To permit suit on such contracts detracts from the principles that the United States cannot be sued without its consent and that the consent must be express and not implied."

18. Ponderendolph v. Derry Township, 330 F. Supp. 1346 (1971), in which the alleged negligence of the United States assertedly caused the wrongful death of the plaintiff's husband; but plaintiff's action is dismissed:

"Thus, we have a case relating to the sovereign itself, which from early times was immune from any action or claim by an individual, except where the sovereign expressly consented to entertain such suit. The United States has evidently consented to many forms of actions and claims against it, but virtue of the Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C. section 2671 et seq. Which broadly consented to persons instituting actions against the United States government as though it was an individual. But this consent to be sued is not absolute and irrevocable, and the Government may as of any time withdraw or limit its consent in whole or in part.

"In support of their motion [to dismiss], the movants [the U.S.] now rely on the Flood Control Act, and in particular to the immunity provided in section 3 thereof, 33 U.S.C. section 702c which provides 'No liability of any kind shall attach to or rest upon the United States for any damage from or by floods or flood waters at any place . . .'

"Thus, the determination to be made here is one of law. Where Congress has not consented to entertain suit against the United States, the intent of the legislature must be followed. In construing section 702c, the Court in National Mfg. Co., supra, 210 F.2d at page 271 stated:

'The language used shows Congressional anticipation that it will be claimed after the happening of floods that negligence of government employees was a proximate cause of damages where floods or flood waters have destroyed or damaged goods. But the section prohibits government liability of 'any kind' and at 'any place'. So that uniformly and throughout the country at any place where there is damage 'from' or 'by' a flood or flood waters in spite of and notwithstanding federal flood control works no liability of any kind may attach to or rest upon the United States therefor.'

"Suits against the United States to recover for flood damages have been rejected by the courts. [. . . and require dismissal of this suit.]" (Citations omitted.)

19. Affiliated Ute Citizens v. United States, 406 U.S. 128 (1972), finding no consent to be sued:

"The United States, of course, may not be sued without its consent. United States v. Sherwood, 312 U.S. 584, 586 (1941). This long-established principle has been applied in actions for the possession or conveyance of real estate. . . . It has been applied to Indian lands the title to which the United States holds in trust. . . . It has been applied, specifically, in a suit by an Indian who has a beneficial interest in land [and] therefore, controls the distribution aspect of the AUC case unless the United States has consented to be sued.

"The consent, it is claimed, exists in 25 U.S.C. section 345. This, however, is an allotment statute. Allotment is a term of art in Indian law. . . . It means a selection of specific land awarded to an individual allottee from a common holding. . . . Section 345 authorizes, and provides governmental consent for, only actions for allotment. . . .

"Although the interest in the mineral estate that AUC seeks to have conveyed pro rata to the individual mixed-bloods perhaps could be made the subject of an allotment, it has never been so subjected. Neither is it appurtenant to an allotment. The interest relates to the tribal land of the reservation. It remains tribal property. Further, section 10 of the 1954 Act . . . itself contemplates and provides specifically for the non-allocation of that interest.

"We therefore readily conclude that section 345 has no application here. Neither do 28 U.S.C. sections 1399 and 2409 afford a basis for jurisdiction; they have application only to partition suits where the United States is a tenant in common or a joint tenant. That is not this situation.

"The AUC action, therefore, was properly dismissed for want of jurisdiction." (Citations omitted.) 20. Bruner v. United States, 343 U.S. 112 (1952), upholding legislative repeal of the right to sue for compensation even after certiorari had been granted by the Supreme Court:

"In 1941, petitioner was appointed a civilian fire chief at Camp Wheeler, Georgia, by a local army commander acting under authority delegated by the Secretary of War. In 1948, petitioner brought this action in the District Court to recover overtime compensation allegedly due for his services as fire chief. . . .

"At the time this action was commenced, Congress had provided that nothing in the Tucker Act shall be construed as giving the District Court—

'jurisdiction of cases brought to recover fees, salary, or compensation for official services of officers of the United States or brought for such purpose by persons claiming as such officers or as assignees or legal representatives thereof; but no suit pending on the 27th day of June 1898 shall abate or be affected by this provision.'

"The District Court, holding that petitioner was an 'officer of the United States,' entered judgment dismissing petitioner's complaint for want of jurisdiction. The Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit affirmed.

"In Beal v. United States, the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit sustained jurisdiction of the District Court over a suit brought by another civilian fire fighter appointed by the War Department on the ground that he was only an 'employee' and not an 'officer of the United States.' We granted certiorari in the case at bar to resolve the conflict of decisions. . . .

"After certiorari had been granted in this case, the Act of October 31, 1951, Pub. L. No. 248, became effective. Section 50(b) of that Act amended the applicable clause of the Judicial Code by inserting, immediately after 'officers' in such clause, the words 'or employees'. . . ." As a result of this amendment we are confronted at the threshold of this case with the question whether the Act of October 31, 1951, withdrawing the jurisdiction of the District Court over actions for compensation brought by 'employees,' applies to an action pending on the effective date of the Act. The power of Congress to withhold jurisdiction from the District Court 'in the exact degrees and character which to Congress may seem proper for the public good' is not challenged. . . .

"In Ritchie, a case arising under the internal revenue laws, jurisdiction was based upon an Act of 1833 granting the circuit courts jurisdiction over all cases arising under the revenue laws. After decision in the Circuit Court and while an appeal to this Court was pending, an Act of 1866 withdrew the jurisdiction of the circuit courts over cases arising under the internal revenue laws without any reservation saving cases such as Ritchie's. This Court held:

'It is clear, that when the jurisdiction of a cause depends upon a statute the repeal of the statute takes away the jurisdiction. And it is equally clear, that where a jurisdiction, conferred by statute, is prohibited by a subsequent statute, the prohibition is, so far, a repeal of the statute conferring the jurisdiction.

"In another case arising under the same jurisdictional statutes, the Court, in following Ritchie, stated the applicable rule as follows:

'Jurisdiction in such cases was conferred by an act of Congress, and when that act of Congress was repealed the power to exercise such jurisdiction was withdrawn, and inasmuch as the repealing act contained no saving clause, all pending actions fell, as the jurisdiction depended entirely upon the act of Congress.' The Assessors v. Osbornes, 9 Wall. 567, 575 (1870h).

"This rule—that, when a law conferring jurisdiction is repealed without any reservation as to pending cases, all cases fall with the law—has been adhered to consistently by this Court.•

"This case is not affected by the so-called general savings statute which provided that 'repeal of any statute shall not have the effect to release or extinguish any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under such statute.' Congress has not altered the nature or validity of petitioner's rights or the Government's liability but has simply reduced the number of tribunals authorized to hear and determine such rights and liabilities . . . Lynch v. United States, 292 U.S. 571 (1934)." (Other citations omitted.)

21. Monolith v. Reconstruction Finance Corp., 9th Cir., 282 F.2d 439 (1960), rejecting a Fifth Amendment due process claim:

"Monolith contends in effect that the nature of this action is for just compensation for a taking under the Fifth Amendment. But this contention was in effect determined adversely to Monolith on the prior appeal. . . .

"Moreover, even if the principle of just compensation is involved, it still must be established that the United States has consented to be sued for the recovery of such compensation. The United States may withhold, withdraw, or condition that consent any way it chooses. Laycock v. United States, 9 Cir., 230 F.2d 848, 850. Here the United States had conditioned such consent upon compliance with the procedure prescribed in section 105. That procedure has not been followed.

"There has been no lack of due process." (Citations omitted.)

22. Imhoff-Berg Silk Dyeing Co. v. United States, 43 F. (2d) 836, D.C., N.J. (1930):

"This present action was begun prior to the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1928, but said act made no specific exception of pending suits, and in such case the withdrawal by the United States of its consent to be sued deprives the courts of jurisdiction to enter judgments, even though such suits have been commenced before such withdrawal. United States v. Heinszen, . . . (Other citations omitted.)

23. Clark v. United States, 6th Cir., 461 F.2d 781 (1972), rejecting claims of a Fifth Amendment taking of property and breach of contract by the U.S.:

"There is no necessity for us to transfer this case to a District Court because the Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C. section 2680, expressly prohibits suits against the United States on:

Section 2680. Exceptions.

The provisions of this chapter and section 1346(b) of this title shall not apply to—

(a) Any claim based upon an act or omission of an employee of the Government, exercising due care, in the execution of a statute or regulation, . . .

"It is fundamental that the government has sovereign immunity from suits unless such immunity has been waived by an Act of Congress. It cannot be sued without its consent. See United States v. Shaw, 309 U.S. 495, (1940) and United States v. Sherwood, 312 U.S. 584, (1941). There is no such consent with respect to plaintiffs' claims in the case before us.

"There is no merit to plaintiffs' claims that the government has deprived them of their property in violation of their rights under the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution. They have not shown that the government has taken any of their property within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment."

24. Elmer G. Abbott, et al, 125 Ct. of Claims 330 (1954): "Congress has, of course, the power to withdraw its consent that the United States be sued, Christoffer Hannevig v. United States, 114 C. Cls. 410,414 and cases there cited, and to withdraw jurisdiction from a court of its creation, even as to pending cases, Bruner v. United States, 343 U.S. 112."

25. Thompson v. Whittier, D.D.C., 185 F. Supp 306 (1960). The three-judge district court upholds a U.S. withdrawal of consent to sue, in the face of a constitutional attack, on the basis of Lynch:

"It is well settled that the Government may not be sued without its consent and that, therefore, it is under no obligation to accord a judicial remedy in respect to claims against itself. Therefore, statutes either denying or withdrawing judicial remedies against the United States in respect to claims against it are constitutional. Lynch v. United States.

26. Louisiana v. McAdoo, 234 U.S. 627 (1913), dismisses a suit against Treasury Secretary McAdoo:

"The State of Louisiana had appeared at the bar of this court, through its Attorney Genereal, for the purpose of obtaining permission to file this petition against the Honorable William Gibbs McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and the Honorable C.S. Hamlin, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. The United States, by its Solicitor General, has appeared in opposition contending that the suit is one against the United States and cannot, therefore be brought without its consent.

"No principle is better established than that the United States may not be used in the courts of this country without its consent. If, therefore, this be a suit against the United States, the State, though entitled as a State to appeal to the original jurisdiction of this court, must show some authority from Congress under which such a suit may be brought, or leave to file must be denied.

"That the United States is not named on the record as a party is true. But the question whether it is in legal effect a party to the controversy is not always determined by the fact that it is not named as a party on the record, but by the effect of the judgment or decree which can here be rendered. . . ."

[The court concludes the case is in reality against the United States; and accordingly, denies leave to file.]

27. Gnotta v. United States, 8th Cir., 415 F. 2d 1271 (1969). The opinion, by Circuit Judge Blackmun, states that:

"1. One cannot sue the United States without its consent and a court has no jurisdiction of a suit against the United States to which it has not consented . . .

"2. 'Congress has not constituted the [United States Civil Service] Commission a body corporate or authorized it to be sued eo nominee;' 'a suit involving the action of the Commission generally must be brought against the individual Commissioners as members;' and the Administrative Procedure Act is not 'to be deemed an implied waiver of all governmental immunity from suit.' . . ." (Citations omitted.)

28. Buck v. United States, 10th Cir., 466 F. 2d 481 (1972), upholding sovereign immunity in the face of a constitutional attack:

"The United States as sovereign, may not be sued without its consent and the terms of its consent define the court's jurisdiction. . . . To establish consent and jurisdiction, taxpayers and the trial court relied on 28 U.S.C. section 1346(a)(1). This section, as limited by 26 U.S.C. section 7422(a), gives consent only when the assessment has been paid. . . . and a claim for refund has been filed. . . . Taxpayers present no claim that any assessment has been paid or that any application for refund has been filed.

"Taxpayers argue that if relief is not granted they will be unable to contest the validity of the penalties and will suffer irreparable harm in violation of their Fifth Amendment rights. We need not explore what remedies the taxpayers might have had or now have because we are concerned with sovereign immunity. Whatever actions the taxpayers might have maintained against the Collector of Internal Revenue, . . . are unimportant because we have a suit against the United States, not against a collector."

29. Minnesota v. United States, 305 U.S. 382 (1938). The opinion by Justice Brandeis reaffirms his earlier conclusions in Lynch:

"First. The United States is an indispensable party defendant to the condemnation proceedings. A proceeding against property in which the United States has an interest is a suit against the United States. . . . It is confessedly the owner of the fee of the Indian allotted lands and holds the same in trust for the allottees. As the United States owns the fee of these parcels, the right of way cannot be condemned without making it a party.

"The exemption of the United States from being sued without its consent extends to a suit by a State. . . . Hence Minnesota cannot maintain this suit against the United States unless authorized by some act of Congress.

"Minnesota contends that the United States is not an indispensible party. [This contention is rejected.] . . .

"Second. Minnesota contends that Congress has authorized suit against the United States. [This contention is rejected] . . .

"Third. Minnesota contends that Congress authorized suit in a court of the State by providing in the second paragraph of section 3 of the Act of March 3, 1901, quoted above, for 'condemnation of' lands allotted in severalty to Indians 'in the same manner as land owned in fee.' But the paragraph contains no permission to sue. . . [And this final contention is rejected.]

30. Schillinger v. United States, 155 U.S. 163 (1894), which dismisses constitutional claims:

"The United States cannot be sued in their courts without their consent, and in granting such consent Congress has an absolute discretion to specify the case and contingencies in which the liability of the Government is submitted to the courts for judicial determination. Beyond the letter of such consent, the courts may not go, no matter how beneficial they may deem, or in fact might be, their possession of a larger jurisdiction over the liabilities of the Government.

"It is said that the Constitution forbids the taking of private property for public uses without just compensation; that therefore every appropriation of private property by any official to the uses of the government, no matter however wrongfully made, creates a claim founded upon the Constitution of the United States and within the letter of the grant in the act of 1887 of jurisdiction to the Court of Claims. If that argument be good, it is equally good applied to every other provision of the constitution as well as to every law of Congress. This prohibition of the taking of private property for public use without compensation is no more sacred than that other constitutional provision that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Can it be that Congress intended that every wrongful arrest and detention of an individual, or seizure of his property by an officer of the government, should expose it to an action for damages in the Court of Claims? If any such breadth of jurisdiction was contemplated, language which had already been given a restrictive meaning would have been carefully avoided.

31. United States v. Sherwood, 312 U.S. 584 (1941), rejecting a breach of contract claim against the U.S. because of sovereign immunity:

"The United States, as sovereign, is immune from suit save as it consents to be sued . . .; Keifer & Keifer v. Reconstruction Finance Corp., 306 U.S. 381, 388, . . . and the terms of its consent to be sued in any court define that court's jurisdiction to entertain the suit . . ."

The Court of Claims is a legislative, not a constitutional, court. Its judicial power is derived not from the Judiciary Article of the Constitution, but from the Congressional power "to pay the debts . . . of the United States," which it is free to exercise through judicial as well as non-judicial agencies. It is for this reason, and because of the power of the sovereign to attach conditions to its consent to be sued, that Congress despite the Seventh Amendment, may dispense with a jury trial in suits brought in the Court of Claims.

Except as Congress has consented there is no jurisdiction in the Court of Claims more than in any other court to entertain suits against the United States, or for the review of its decisions by appellate courts.

[The Court then holds that the Congress has not consented to plaintiff's breach of contract claim; and in addition rejects the conclusion that "implied" consent is found in the new Federal Rules of Civil Procedure:]

"This conclusion presupposes that the United States, either by the rules of practice or by the Tucker Act or both, has given its consent to be used in litigations in which issues between the plaintiff and third persons are to be adjudicated. But we think that nothing in the new rules of civil practice so far as they may be applicable in suits brought in district courts under the Tucker Act authorizes the maintenance of any suit against the United States to which it has not otherwise consented. An authority conferred upon a court to make rules of procedure for the exercise of its jurisdiction is not an authority to enlarge that jurisdiction; and the Act of June 19, 1934, 48 Stat. 1064, 28 U.S.C. 723b, authorizing this Court to prescribe rules of procedure in civil actions gave it no authority to modify, abridge or enlarge the substantive rights of litigants or to enlarge or diminish the jurisdiction of federal courts. . . .

"The matter is not one of procedure but of jurisdiction whose limits are marked by the Government's consent to be sued."

32. United States v. Shaw, 309 U.S. 495 (1939).

"Whether that jurisdiction [over a cross-claim against the U.S.] exists depends upon the effect of the voluntary submission to the Michigan court by the United States of its claim against the estate. As a foundation for the examination of that question we may lay the postulate that without specific statutory consent, no suit may be brought against the United States. No officer by his action can confer jurisdiction. Even when suits are authorized they must be brought only in designated courts. The reasons for this immunity are imbedded in our legal philosophy. They partake somewhat of dignity and decorum, somewhat of practical administration, somewhat of the political desirability of an impregnable legal citadel where government as distinct from its functionaries may operate undisturbed by the demands of litigants."

33. U.S. v. U.S. Fidelity Co., 309 U.S. 506 (1940).

"We are of the view, however, that the Missouri judgment is void in so far as it undertakes to fix a credit against the Indian Nations. . . . No statutory authority granted jurisdiction to the Missouri Court to adjudicate a cross-claim against the United States. The public policy which exempted the dependent as well as the dominant sovereignties from suit without consent continues this immunity even after dissolution of the tribal government. These Indian Nations are exempt from suit without Congressional authorization. It is as though the immunity which was theirs as sovereigns passed to the United States for their benefit, as their tribal properties did. . . .

"But, it is said that there was a waiver of immunity by a failure to object to the jurisdiction of the Missouri District Court over the cross-claim. It is a corollary to immunity from suit on the part of the United States and the Indian Nations in tutelage that this immunity cannot be waived by officials. If the contrary were true, it would subject the Government to suit in any court in the discretion of its responsible officers. This is not permissible. . . .

"The reasons for the conclusion that this immunity may not be waived govern likewise the question of res judicata. As no appeal was taken from this Missouri judgment, it is subject to collateral attack only if void. It has heretofore been shown that the suability of the United States and the Indian Nations, whether directly or by cross-action, depends upon affirmative statutory authority. Consent alone gives jurisdiction to adjudge against a sovereign. Absent that consent, the attempted exercise of judicial power is void. The failure of officials to seek review cannot give force to this exercise of judicial power. Public policy forbids the suit unless consent is given, as clearly as public policy makes jurisdiction exclusive by declaration of the legislative body. [The Court therefore rules that the res judicata doctrine] is inapplicable where the issue is the waiver of immunity."

34. Kawananakoa v. Polyblank, 205 U.S. 349 (1907): "Whatever the origin of the doctrine of sovereign immunity, the accepted rationalization of its continued existence is that 'there can be no legal right as against the authority that makes the law on which the right depends.'" Holmes, J., as quoted in Note, Sovereign Immunity in Suits to Enjoin the Enforcement of Unconstitutional Legislation, 50 Harv. L. Rev. 956 (1937).

F. Corpus Juris Secundum: These thirty-seven decisions, and several hundred more, are all briefly reviewed in the Corpus Juris Secundum treatise. See 91 C. J. S., "United States," sections 175-182, especially section 176 (consent of U.S. to be sued), and section 182 (withdrawal of consent). The treatise concludes that the U.S. "by reason of its sovereignty is immune from suit and can only be sued by its own consent," and that "consent to be sued may be withdrawn even though the suit was commenced before the withdrawal."

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the rest of the time.

AGRICULTURE, RURAL DEVELOPMENT AND RELATED AGENCIES AND INTERIOR

In the Agriculture chapter, as in Interior, we had a dispute with OMB over what is called basic math. Using the same numbers—1, 2, 3 and so on—we arrived at different totals. The House, Senate, and CBO determined our $33 billion bill to be several billions below our House 302(b) allocation. OMB's scorekeeping put us at $251 million out of the ballpark and over our own congressional budget resolution.

I'm not going to argue the fine points of addition and subtraction. But our conferees, led by the distinguished chairman of our committee, JAMIE WHITTEN, and the chairman of the Interior Subcommittee, my good friend SID YATES, who have been working so hard to get this bill to the President and signed into law, took out their calculators once again. After hours upon hours of negotiation with our able ranking members—RALPH REGULA and VIRGINIA SMITH—and with the other body, they agreed to make across-the-board cuts in order to reach levels that will be acceptable to the administration.

For Agriculture and Interior, we have cut all discretionary programs by six-tenths of 1 percent. Six-tenths of 1 percent for all the items in these two sections. This has reduced the totals in Interior from $8.145 billion to $8.094 billion. In Agriculture, we have gone from $33.26 billion to $33.06 billion. Total cuts in these two chapters made by our conferees last night are $250 million.

I have never believed in across-the-board cuts. While I support the conference report before us, I deeply regret the fact that we have been forced to agree to these inequitable programmatic cuts in order to reach a moving numerical target.

The distinguished chairman himself presided over more than 30 days of hearings in the Agriculture Subcommittee; 150 hours of oral and written testimony documented in eight volumes and 7,000 pages of hearing record. Our committee reported a bill to this House last July which contained our best recommendations for fiscal year 1986, based upon that testimony.

That bill, which passed by the overwhelming margin of 354 to 71, was $5 billion below fiscal year 1985 enacted levels and some $4 billion below our 302(b) allocation. Despite the effort that went into both the House- and Senate-passed bills, and the conference agreement which we filed less than a week ago, we've taken out the ax. And what have we done? What every across-the-board cut taken in this Congress has done—subsidize the bad programs with funds for the good ones.

We have taken money from low-income weatherization to protect clean coal. We have taken money from schools and hospitals to subsidize timber sales for some of the biggest corporations in this country. We have taken $9 million out of the WIC Program, $71 million out of food stamps, $4 million out of our title II Food for Peace Program, $24 million out of rural development assistance programs.

My friends, in an effort to get this bill signed into law, we have completed the first of many exercises with our President.

This is no Jane Fonda workout. This is the Gramm-Rudman exercise class, and we are already sweating and aching. These marathon sessions on the ropes are not going to put this country into shape—they are only going to turn whatever muscle we have into flab.

The sequestrations haven't even begun yet, and I can already hear the moaning and gnashing of teeth. We've got programs down to bare-bones levels, and the White House cuts are just ghosts of Christmases to come. Two months down the road, I don't want to hear a peep out of my 271 Gramm-Rudman colleagues. Two months from now, when they're sharpening the knives down on Pennsylvania Avenue, I don't want to hear about what is happening to your UDAG projects, your EDA projects, our housing for the elderly and handicapped. We've got $10 million in this CR for AIDS research, $193 million for the needy family and elderly feeding programs, and none of it is protected from the Gramm-Rudman cuts.

DEFENSE

In the Defense portion of the resolution, there are three significant changes to the resolution considered earlier this week.

First, the number has changed. The document before you today is $1.3 billion below the first resolution. Reductions were made to procurement and research accounts and the bill now is $281.2 billion, just $4 billion above the 1985 level, almost $23 billion below the request, $4.6 billion above the House-passed bill, and $6.9 billion below the Senate version.

Second, the Senate finally agreed to accept one of the procurement reforms too important to many of us in the House. We didn't get all we wanted, but it is a start. The language agreed to last night strengthened the current authorization language regarding costs allowed to be charged against a contract in two significant areas. The Department of Defense will now be required by law to inform Congress of the definitions, exclusions, limitations, and qualifications regarding allowable costs prior to the publication of the regulations. Congress now will be a participant in the process of tightening up on such costs allowed in order to stop country club dues, vacations, dog kennel charges, and other ridiculous charges from being passed on to the taxpayers by defense contractors.

The conferees also direct the Comptroller General to evaluate on a recurring basis the effectiveness of the Department's policies in eliminating unallowable costs to be charged against defense contracts.

The third major change has to do with what many members saw as a potential slush fund for use by defense as a hedge against Gramm-Rudman cuts.

That was never the intent of the conferees at the time we first fenced $6.3 billion in prior year unobligated balances. But, because of a combination of misinformation and misunderstanding, many Members weren't convinced the fence around the money was strong enough or high enough to keep the Department from playing games with us.

And so, the fence is stronger in the resolution now before you. The $6.3 billion remains, but the law is more specific.

That money may be used only to pay retirement costs which are required by current law but for which funding was reduced in anticipation of future legislation which may or may not be enacted by next summer.

The money may also be used, as spelled out in the bill, to cover the military pay raise which went into effect last October.

Money is fenced for the Mariner Fund—the build and charter proposal, should it ever be authorized.

The Coast Guard receives an additional $140 million to bring that service closer to meeting the requirements of its wartime mission. In all, $475 million is in the bill for that Coast Guard purpose.

And finally, the money is fenced to provided additional funds for conventional force readiness—training, flying hours, steaming hours, and the like, as we attempt to make conventional forces stronger reducing our reliance on nuclear forces to address a crisis.

In each category, the funds are subject to the usual reprogramming procedures of the Appropriations Committee.

Justification documents and supporting data must accompany each request for use of these moneys. In many cases, hearings will be held.

But in no case, as is spelled out in the bill, may the Department use any of the funds in this account, or any other funds made available in the bill, to offset the impact of sequester orders brought about by Gramm-Rudman.

Defense will take its share of the hits, and there is no cushion in this bill to soften the blow.

Mr. Speaker, the conferees on the Defense portion did a magnificent job in not only winning additional concessions from the Senate on three major points, they also somehow managed to keep the fragile agreements reached earlier this week, from coming completely apart although at times the conference showed signs of coming unstuck.

I repeat what I said with regard to the earlier agreement: It isn't all I would like it to be.

But the Defense sections are a little lower in dollars, a little tougher on contractors, and a little more restrictive on expenditures than the earlier version.

We made progress without having to give up a single point in other ways.

It isn't perfect, but conferences don't produce perfection. They produce compromise.

That is what we have before us as regards Defense. It is the best we could do, and far more than I would have thought we would get when we began the second round with the Senate.

It merits our support.

LEGISLATIVE

Mr. Speaker, first of all let me address the items in the legislative section of the bill. There was a great deal of concern expressed on the floor last Monday, and unfortunately a great deal of misinformation, about what we did on congressional salaries and honoraria.

In regard to honoraria, the Senate added language to the bill which, on the face of it, would deny to an elected Member of Congress the right to continue his or her profession or professional relationships after being elected to Congress. That language raised serious constitutional and practical questions about the ability or willingness of individuals to serve in this body, especially to serve only one or two terms.

The House allows its Members to continue such relationships with full disclosure required to the Ethics Committee, and the House conferees strongly objected to the Senate language. Not only do we require full disclosure, any income earned by such activities is limited, along with honoraria, to a total of 30 percent of our congressional salary.

But let us look at the real reason for this Senate amendment. I submit that this was but the latest spasm of Senate frenzy against any restraints on what they regard as an unlimited right to honoraria income earned because of their position as U.S. Senators.

This is not a new objective, only a new tactic. It is aimed at an amendment which I offered, along with 122 cosponsors, in 1983, limiting House and Senate income from honoraria for speeches, appearances, and articles to 30 percent of congressional salary. That amendment was enacted as part of the fiscal year 1983 supplemental, Public Law 98–63.

Using a perverted sense of compromise, the Senate hoped that the House conferees would eliminate the honoraria limit in current law, in exchange for knocking out the new total restriction on income from your profession or professional relationships. The House conferees refused, and rightly so.

The Senate amendment was poorly conceived and poorly drafted. Necessary definitions as to its provisions would presumably have been determined by the Attorney General of the United States. A notoriously political office in most of the administrations since I have been around here.

But the Senate adamantly refused, after 2 days of wrangling, to give up on relaxing the honoraria limitation. In one of the last agreements in the conference last night, the Senate conferees voted 7 to 5 to insist on raising the limitation from 30 percent of salary to 40 percent. House conferees refused to allow this provision to apply to the House, and that is what we have brought back.

While the Senate will be taking a 10-percent increase in their honoraria limitation, amounting to $7,510 per year, language in the statement of the managers stipulates that this only affects the Senate. House Members will continue to be bound by House Rule 47, which limits outside income from honoraria and other sources to 30 percent of salary.

The other body may be greedy, but we refuse to take this increase. I hope our friends in the press gallery are paying better attention than they did when this issue came up a couple of days ago.

Turning to the pay issue, even more misinformation is being spread about what is in this resolution than on the honoraria issue. The 6:30 newscast this morning on national public radio stated flatly that the continuing resolution included a pay increase for Members of Congress. By 7:30, this had been corrected, but many of your constituents may have left for work by that time.

Nothing in this resolution provides a pay raise for Members of Congress.

Are you listening up there?

Read my lips.

Nothing in this resolution provides a pay raise for Members of Congress.

That is what the resolution does not do. What does the resolution do?

The Senate amendment agreed to by the House conferees amends title II of the United States Code in regard to the procedures to be used in response to recommendations of the Commission on Executive, Legislative and Judicial Salaries. This Commission was established in 1967 to review the rates of pay of senior officials in all three branches of the Government. The Commission is composed of three members appointed by the President, two by the President of the Senate—in other words, the Vice President—two by the Speaker of the House, and two by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

After reviewing pay rates, the Commission reports to the President any recommendations for changes. The President then reports such recommendations, along with his own recommendations as to exact rates of pay, to the Congress.

Under current law, such Presidential recommendations can be vetoed by a vote by either House. As you are all aware, this is now in violation of the Supreme Court's Chadha decision against one-House vetoes.

The changes proposed in this resolution to avoid the problem with the Chadha decision were proposed by the Commission itself. The major effect of the changes is the requirement that any Commission recommendations sent up by the President would be subject to disapproval by a joint resolution agreed to by the Congress—that is both Houses—and signed by the President.

That is all this amendment does. It meets the requirements of the Chadha decision. It is a technical but necessary change.

The next recommendations of the Commission are expected at the end of next year. Congress would consider any recommended changes sent up by President Reagan early in 1987. Given the current budgetary circumstances and the record of this President, it is at best uncertain whether any changes would be sent up—at least any changes of an upward nature.

In any event, Congress can vote to disapprove any such changes. That is the vote for or against a pay raise. The vote today is not a vote on that issue.

I hope that with these reassurances that nothing in this conference agreement affects salaries or honoraria for Members of the House of Representatives, that all Members of this body will be able to support this agreement in good conscience.

TRANSPORTATION

In the Transportation section of the CR, we made two changes. First of all, we dropped the Senate provision making permanent the temporary requirement that States adopt a drinking age of 21 years old, or face a percentage cut in their highway funds. As a Representative whose district includes a "blood border" with Vermont, I think we may have erred in dropping this provision. But because it was a matter of controversy, and obviously of great concern to a number of Members last Monday night, it was deleted.

In addition, we needed to cut approximately $50 million from the Transportation section of the bill. That cut came from the Coast Guard's procurement account. I opposed that cut, because I thought it should have been spread between the Coast Guard and other, larger, procurement programs with significant unexpended balance carryovers.

Fortunately, we were able to make up for this cut in the Defense section of the bill, where $140 million of the Defense Department's unobligated balances were earmarked for the Navy/Coast Guard Coastal Defense Augmentation effort.

This brings the Coastal Defense Augmentation Program up to the Senate's original level of $375 million, to be used for patrol boats, C-130's, advanced radar, medium-range helicopters, tugs, and related equipment. When added to the $217 million in the Coast Guard's regular procurement account, it amounts to a significant level of resources to give the Coast Guard the tools it needs to perform its many critical missions.

Although there was no change, I do want to stress for my colleagues who were concerned about Coast Guard operating expenses that we have provided a total of $1.752 billion—$1.652 billion in the Transportation section and $100 million resulting from my amendment to the Defense bill. That amount should be adequate to permit the continuation of all ongoing Coast Guard missions, as well as to prevent the closure of the Great Lakes stations that were slated for consolidation under the original Coast Guard budget.

Again, maybe I got carried away, but I want to get back to the focal point. I hope you will all vote for the CR. It is a good CR. We worked hard on it. There are a lot of things in here maybe you do not like and a lot of things that I do not like, but taken as a whole, it is a good CR. I hope we can pass it and you can all go home with your families and enjoy yourselves. Have a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WISE].

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express concern over one provision in the CR. We have cleaned up some of the problems dealing with government procurement, but unfortunately, congressional procurement did not get reformed. So there is language in here that would permit the honoraria for the Senate Members to increase to 40 percent of income. I think that is pretty hard to swallow at a time when so many of our people are having trouble.

Then we get to another provision which says that the Quadrennial Commission that will meet next year to approve pay raises for Members of the Congress, in order for their recommendations to be disapproved, that is, not to go into effect, it will be necessary for a vote of both Houses of Congress in opposition and the President must sign that bill making in opposition. There is as much chance of that as me flying safely off the Capitol.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say that in this day of Gramm-Rudman, the theory has been that if you cannot agree on spending cuts, there will be automatic cuts. This goes the other way. Apparently if you cannot agree on pay increases, there will be automatic pay increases, and that concerns me greatly.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WISE. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I just want to make one observation. In regard to the pay commission, that will not apply in the 99th Congress. It will be in the 100th Congress, a new Congress. There will be a new Congress coming in.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO], a member of the committee.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman yielding me this time.

I simply would like to reiterate the point that the gentleman from Massachusetts was making. This is not a foolproof process. The Quadrennial Commission law needs reform. It violates the Constitution in the sense that we no longer can use the legislative veto after the Chadha decision was rendered by the Supreme Court. Consequently, there is the possibility that a new commission, which will be appointed sometime in 1986, may make recommendations covering the 3,150 top level personnel in the Government. Those recommendations, or alternative ones, may be forwarded to the Congress by the President early in the 100th Congress in 1987 and, depending on how the process works, they may go into effect.

But, there is no pay raise in this bill and the increase in honoraria will only affect the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, in general, let me simply say that we do not find ourselves here today in a state of anarchy that confronted us the other night when we defeated the conference report. We have worked on the bill and, I think, calmed down and realized that it is time that we go about the business of celebrating the holidays with our families, leaving these matters behind us here.

We are not proud of every item in this product, but most of them are worthy of our support. It is the best we can do and we need to pass it.

I would like to tell my colleagues that the difficulty of dealing with these omnibus measures is only going to be exacerbated by the Gramm-Rudman process. We are going to be here in this situation many times during the next several years unitl the plague leaves us.

I hope we will be able to work out our differences, because they are vast and wide, with the spirit of comity that the Appropriations Committee provides the House. There are many fine people in both parties who work together to resolve the problems that the whole Congress faces. We are not getting the help from the executive branch that we would like to have, but the committee serves this body well with its ability to reconcile differences and compromise what seem to be impossible issues.

I hope that we can continue to work together. I know we are going to come under even more pressure as we face Gramm-Rudman, but we do provide, I think, some hope for the Congress. I hope we come back in January, tackle the budget process, as the gentleman from Iowa urged earlier, with speed and diligence and let the Appropriations Committee do its work. As always we will serve you well if you will let us.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER].

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I urge support for this continuing resolution.

Amazingly, we have a procurement reform, and I say amazingly because the other body was adamant that we would have none. It was only because of the tenacity of our House colleagues, Congressmen ADDABBO, CHAPPELL, MURTHA, MCDADE, FRANK, MILLER, FAZIO, AUCOIN, and DICKS, that we have prevailed.

Now, what have we won? We have won our allowable cost law. There will now be clarification of the definitions of the vast gray areas between allowable and unallowable cost. It is such gray areas that have contractors charging off on the taxpayers fancy parties and fancy lifestyles that should be prohibited.

For 25 years, the Pentagon has resisted requests to tighten up cost principles. The legacy of their neglect of those notorious revelations of boarding fees, for, first, the dogs, memberships, country clubs, and customized mattresses, all for contractor bigwigs.

Now, we did not win 75 percent of the reforms that we should have won, but we have prevailed in our efforts to win concessions of procurement reform from the other body. This is major. We have shown that we have the guts and the commitment to get the job done and we have walked tall. Even those of us who are 5 feet tall, we have walked tall, because we have made that other body come to grips with us.

We will continue our important work of procurement reform with the American people behind us.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues for their incredible legislative skills. I go home to my family feeling that we have done a very good job.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, to wind up the debate, may I express the hope that everyone will support us today. I wish everybody a merry Christmas and a happy holiday.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the remaining time to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT], an outstanding member of the authorizing Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much.

I congratulate the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Florida and the gentleman from New York and all the others that brought this forward.

I plan to vote for the passage of this bill, as I did before when it was before us, because there has to come an end eventually to legislation and we are at the end of the session.

Like the gentlewoman from California, I feel that great advances were made in the field of procurement reform. I think that was a difficult problem for the Appropriations Committee to have to handle. It is not logical that they have to handle it, but they did handle it, and I congratulate them upon it.

Of course, there are things we ought to do in the future. There are more procurement reforms that ought to be enacted, but I am sure that will happen in the next session, in the months to follow.

So to conclude my remarks, I want to say, I think I express on behalf of all Members of Congress that we congratulate this committee on the fine work that it did under very difficult circumstances. They brought forth, I think, a very good bill.

I would like to see more money for defense than was there, but I still feel it is the best we can do under the circumstances.

I congratulate the committee and hope we can all have a Merry Christmas.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity to extend my special appreciation for those members of the appropriations conference who worked so hard to obtain a bilateral antisatellite [Asat] test moratorium in the continuing resolution. This issue has been of particular concern to me for several years, but the need for such a moratorium has never been more important. On the eve of the conference agreement on the Asat moratorium language, the administration launched two new Asat target vehicles. Without this moratorium, additional Asat tests were imminent. With two more successful tests, the Air Force could have declared the system operational, and begun the process of full deployment.

This administration continues to flaunt the will of the Congress. Last year, the House and Senate agreed on a compromise in which the administration was required to submit a certification report to Congress prior to conducting a test. The President was required to certify four basic elements: First, that the United States is negotiating, in good faith, an Asat treaty with the Soviet Union; second, that the Asat test is necessary to our national security; third, that such a test would not impair prospects for negotiating on Asat's; and fourth, that the test is not a violation of the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty of 1972. In August, a report was submitted which was so flawed, and such a pious fraud, that it was indefensible. It seems clear to many in the Congress that this administration will undertake no arms control measures until the Congress mandates it by language such as we now have in the continuing resolution, or possibly takes even more forceful steps.

Today's action on the moratorium meets those four basic criteria set out in previous law in a simple, yet direct way, without damaging our national security. It states simply—and without complex diplomatic maneuverings—that the United States will not test an Asat system against objects in space as long as the Soviets refrain from doing so. No loopholes, no questionable language. It sends a clear and unequivocable message to the administration that the Congress intends to act in a responsible manner with regard to arms control, even if it refuses to do so.

The moratorium costs us nothing. There's no increase in Pentagon expenditures. Yet it insures that both the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. will be able to maintain survivable satellites systems—a key security element. The Soviet's present system, which has failed most of its tests, is probably less effective than the system which the United States dismantled 10 years ago. The moratorium will insure that neither superpower will have a modern effective Asat.

There's never been a plausible scenario for the use of Asat's, except as part of a first strike attack in an all-out nuclear war. In that scenario, all space assets on both sides will probably be destroyed by nuclear explosions in space anyway. Thus the United States, which has far more and far superior satellites, will be able to maintain its key intelligence gathering capability during peacetime without fear of attack. And the danger of nuclear war through accidental satellite malfunction will be substantially reduced.

The Asat test ban is true arms control at its best. It is unquestionably bilateral—we won't test if you don't. It is verifiable through the very technology—satellites—that Asat's are intended to destroy. And it not only saves billions of dollars for the weapon, it also protects our substantial investments in space.

Again, I express my deepest appreciation for all of those who have worked hard on this endeavor both in and out of the conference, and for that matter in and out of Congress. I have no grand illusion that this moratorium will insure anything more than what it states—a bilateral ban on Asat testing for the next year. Yet, as John Kennedy noted:

Peace is a daily, a weekly, a monthly process, gradually changing opinion, slowly eroding old barriers, quietly building new structures. And however undramatic the pursuit of peace, the pursuit must go on.

The Asat ban is by no means the end—it is not even the beginning—but merely one of a series of those undramatic pursuits which of necessity must go on. Today, Congress has the opportunity to deliver a small package of hope to the American and Soviet people in this season of peace. Then it has an obligation to continue the pursuit of peace, and the end of the nuclear arms race, throughout the next year.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I just want to congratulate the conferees on their hard work.

In particular, I want to thank the conferees on the defense portion for retaining the language prohibiting the expenditure of funds unless they are authorized. The House and the Congress reviewed each of the defense programs carefully during the authorization process and this language will ensure that funds for every defense program will receive the necessary review before the money can be spent.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, there has been some confusion over a Senate amendment to the continuing resolution. That amendment would revise the statute which provides for the so-called Quadrennial Commission so that the procedures under which recommendations made by that Commission are considered would meet the constitutional requirements enunciated in the Supreme Court's Chadha decision concerning legislative vetoes. The existing Quadrennial Commission legislation contains a legislative veto provision, a process declared unconstitutional in Chadha.

Mr. Speaker, some Members have expressed concern that the Senate amendment will result in an automatic pay increase for Members, and one Member even has gone so far as to say the increase would be to a rate close to $100,000. As chairman of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, the committee with jurisdiction over the Quadrennial Commission Act, I want to assure my colleagues that nothing could be further from the truth.

The act requires the appointment of a Commission of private citizens every 4 years to review the rates of pay for Members and other top Government officials and to recommend to the President appropriate changes in those rates. It then requires the President, after considering the Commission's recommendations, to submit his own recommendations to the Congress. Finally, it provides that these recommendations will go into effect only if approved by both Houses of Congress. There is no requirement that the congressional action be presented to the President for his signature.

The most recent Commission was appointed early this year. Recognizing that the procedure required by the act might be unconstitutional under the Chadha decision, the Commission asked the Department of Justice for its opinion on the matter. On March 29, 1985, the Assistant Attorney General, Office of Legal Counsel, responded that the existing procedure was unconstitutional. According to the Assistant Attorney General:

We believe that [the Act] contains a legislative veto device that is unconstitutional under the Court's rationale in Chadha. Approval by Congress of revised salary levels is clearly "legislative action" that has "the purpose and effect of altering the legal rights, duties and relations of persons * * * outside the legislative branch," 103 S. Ct. at 2784. Congress can therefore act only in accordance with the "single finely wrought and exhaustively considered, procedure" set forth in the Constitution for legislative action—passage by both Houses and submission of the legislation to the President. Id. Because [the Act] purports to authorize Congress to enact salary levels without presentment to the President, it falls squarely within the Court's reasoning in Chadha.

The Assistant Attorney General then addressed the question of the constitutionality of "a statute that delegates to the President the authority to establish new salary levels for the covered individuals, based on certain criteria, but that would also give Congress a certain time period before those salaries take effect to enact legislation disapproving the new levels." He concluded:

Provided that such disapproval legislation would then be presented to the President for his signature or veto, in accordance with Art. 1, sec. 7 of the Constitution, such a scheme would satisfy the requirements of Chadha.

Mr. Speaker, because of the constitutional defect in existing law, last year's Commission was impotent to put into motion the machinery for a review of the pay rates for top level Government officials which would have any possiblity of resulting in appropriate changes in those rates. It did, however, recommend legislation which would cure the constitutional defect and which would mandate the appointment of an interim commission to make appropriate recommendations to the President—recommendations which then would be before the Congress in 1987. This recommended legislation was added to the continuing resolution by the Senate. It cures the constitutional defect in existing law. It does not preclude the Congress from working its will on any recommendations which may be forthcoming in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I again emphasize that the Senate amendment is not an "automatic pay raise." It does not specify or even suggest that changes in congressional pay are necessary or desirable. To characterize it as doing these things is wrong. What it does do is cure an unconstitutional statute by providing a mechanism for careful, constitutional reviews of pay rates for top Government officials in the future.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the Appropriations Conference Committee adopted several amendments to the Department of the Interior appropriations bill provisions pertaining to the Navajo and Hopi relocation program. One of the amendments provides as follows:

Provided further, That none of the funds contained in this or any other Act may be used to evict any Navajo household who, as of November 30, 1985, is physically domiciled on the lands partitioned to the Hopi Tribe until such time as a new or replacement home is available for such household.

It is my understanding of this amendment that it is intended to permit Navajo families to continue to reside on lands partitioned to the Hopi Tribe without fear of eviction after the July 7, 1986, deadline for completion of the relocation program. The conference committee has accurately recognized the fact that hundreds of Navajo families will not be relocated from Hopi lands by the July 7, 1986, the replacement homes and related facilities which are required to be provided to them by the mandate of Public Law 93–531, the Navajo and Hopi Settlement Act of 1974.

It is my understanding that the committee, by adopting this amendment, intends to ensure that all Navajo relocatees will receive the full measure of the benefits provided by Public Law 93–531 prior to their removal from Hopi lands. The benefits to be provided include compensation for their dwellings, replacement homes and "related community facilities such as water, sewer, roads, schools, and health facilities." Finally, I would like to note that the amendment in no way alters the duty of the Navajo and Hopi Indian Relocation Commission to minimize the adverse "social, economic, cultural and other impacts" of relocation of these Navajo families.

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Speaker, I must reluctantly oppose this conference report on House Joint Resolution 465, the continuing appropriations resolution to fund the operations of several Government agencies through the end of this fiscal year. Last week, we entered a new budget era by passing the Gramm-Rudman balanced budget law. That law is intended to force hard budget choices and is based on the principle of sharing equally the pain of deficit reduction. This bill before us avoids the hard choices for the military and protects the military budget from its fair share of cuts. It is business as usual.

Those of us who oppose this bill today are told to wait until next year. We cannot wait until next year. Next year the Gramm-Rudman balanced budget law will require cuts elsewhere to make up for any increases in the deficit due to increased defense spending. The bigger the deficit next year, the bigger the required cuts. The mandatory cuts will come out of agriculture, education, community development and almost every other Federal program.

I appreciate the heroic efforts of the House conferees to obtain the best bill possible in the face of adamant intransigence on the part of the Senate conferees right up to what will probably be the last day of this year's session. But here we are, presented with a huge package bill appropriating hundreds of billions of dollars and allowed one yes-or-no vote on whether or not to keep the Government running. Some will say that there is nothing unusual about this, and that we do this every year. Unfortunately, this is true. This year, much of the fault lies with the Senate, since we in the House had acted on 12 of the 13 regular appropriations bills over 1 month ago, but they languished while the Senate failed to act.

Ultimately, however, I cannot accept the Senate's delay and intransigence up to the last minute as a reason to support a bill which must be judged on its own merits. Iowans of all political beliefs have told me again and again that they support an across-the-board budget freeze which applies to the military and does not allow any increases for inflation. They have also told me that they strongly support tough provisions to end defense contractor ripoffs.

The House affirmed these positions early this year. First, the House voted a budget resolution that would have frozen the total 1986 defense budget at the fiscal 1985 level of $292 billion. Second, the House upheld this position when it voted 301 to 115 to reduce the defense authorization bill by $10 billion in order to bring it in line with the House budget resolution figure of $302. This defense authorization bill also contained four strong provisions to end defense contract ripoffs and reform our procurement system. Third, the House voted October 30 for a defense appropriations bill that would have frozen total defense spending at $292 billion.

Ever since, we have been under constant pressure from the Senate to cave in, increase defense spending and throw out defense contractor procurement reforms.

First, House negotiators brought back to us the House-Senate compromise on the budget resolution. It allowed a maximum of $302 billion for defense, a $10 billion increase. But, we were told, that number was just a maximum planning number and, when we considered the actual defense spending bills, we could spend less. I voted against that budget resolution because I didn't believe we would spend a dime less.

Second, we considered the House-Senate compromise version of the defense authorization bill, which sets defense policy and spending levels. As the Senate insisted, the bill allowed a $10 billion increase for defense, which pushed total defense spending to $302 billion. Furthermore, all defense contract procurement reforms were thrown out. Those of us who protested were told that our concerns would be addressed in the defense appropriations bill, which actually lays out dollars.

Finally, here we are on the last day of the session considering a huge spending bill that includes the House-Senate compromise version of the defense appropriations bill. It obligates total defense spending of $303.9 billion, which is $11 billion more than originally approved by the House. In addition, it includes only one of the four defense contract procurement reforms we sought, and in a watered-down form. Those of us who protest are told to "wait until next year."

We cannot wait until next year to reduce the budget deficit, control defense spending or end defense contract ripoffs. I will vote against this bill today.

I would, however, like to again commend the negotiators for the House for obtaining the prohibition on flight testing of antisatellite weapons unless the President certifies that the Soviet Union has conducted a test of such a weapon. This effort toward mutual arms control is a crucial attempt to avoid a qualitative escalation of the arms race in space. In addition, although many important procurement reforms voted by the House were omitted from the final bill, I commend the conferees for obtaining a compromise version of the allowable cost procurement reform supported overwhelmingly by the House. This provision moves in the direction of ending the outrageous practice of certain defense contractors of charging the Government for costs such as that of boarding dogs.

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 465.

While I support House Joint Resolution 465, I have serious reservations about the Defense portions of this bill, even though I am pleased to see that the moratorium on Asat testing passed by the House has been retained in the conference report.

From a budgetary standpoint, the conference report on the continuing resolution provides the Department of Defense with additional billions of dollars over the house-passed appropriations level of $292.6 billion. This is the second time during the fiscal year 1986 spending cycle that a conference agreement has leaned toward the higher Defense spending levels of the other body. Certainly I applaud the conferees' actions yesterday to cut $1.3 billion from Defense and to fence in the $6.3 billion of previously unobligated funds.

Nonetheless, the spending level still exceeds that passed twice by the House. At a time of ever-increasing budget deficits, at a time when Congress has passed the Gramm/Rudman/Hollings balanced budget amendment—which will mandate across-the-board cuts in many vital domestic programs—and at a time when studies have shown that billions of dollars worth of waste can be cut out of the defense budget without harming national security, I find the conference action especially disturbing.

From a substantive and perhaps more important standpoint, this conference report practically ignores the House will on military procurement reform. This body has voted by overwhelming margins on several occasions to put into law reforms which would fundamentally change the way the Pentagon does business. Amendments on multiple sourcing, revolving door, allowable cost, and should cost would all help impose some fiscal discipline on the Pentagon, and would show the public that we in Congress are taking serious steps to combat waste, fraud, and abuse.

Sadly certain Members in the other body do not see these procurement reforms in such a positive light. Indeed, during the authorization conference, all four reforms were weakened to the point where they would have little, if any effect. During the continuing resolution conference, the other body did not even bother to weaken the reforms; they chose instead to throw them out. Mr. Speaker, this action calls into question the validity of a process in which the will of one body of Congress can be so blatantly ignored. I certainly applaud the diligent efforts of my colleagues Mr. CHAPPELL and Mr. ADDABBO to ensure that certain provisions of allowable cost made it into this continuing resolution, however, that alone is not enough.

Mr. Speaker, I did not choose to vote against the continuing resolution on Monday night, and I will not vote against it this time either. I do not believe that the wheels of government should come to a grinding halt because of procurement reforms or any other single issue with which I disagree, however important it may be. And certainly there is much that I support in this continuing resolution. However, this should not be taken as an indication that I, along with my reform colleagues who also voted for the continuing resolution, do not take procurement reforms seriously.

Mr. Speaker, let there be no mistake—we will be back next year.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, again we find ourselves debating important legislation which contains a provision portraying the Synthetic Fuels Corporation as a drain on our Federal Treasury.

If I agreed with that prognosis—that our synthetic fuels program was harming our Nation and that it was an obstacle in our struggle to balance the budget—I would be first in line calling for its abolition. But I am as committed as anyone here to cutting the deficit. I'm not afraid to make difficult choices, and my record will bear out my claim.

But in the case of synthetic fuels, we're not just talking about dollars and cents. We're talking about energy security. About the vulnerability of our country to the whims of a foreign government. And we're also talking about fairness, and the ability of our Government to keep its word.

The specifics are Cathedral Bluffs, an oil shale project which this resolution would destroy, and Parachute Creek, which would be severely harmed. These projects were part of the vision of an energy independent America—one which would never again be under the thumb of the OPEC cartel.

While I certainly do not condone mismanagement and the abuses that have taken place with the SFC, I believe that to abandon this protective shield against a future energy crisis—just because energy is plentiful today—would seem extremely shortsighted. Passage of this resolution would shatter any chance we might have had of developing a viable, and totally American fuel supply.

And to those of you claiming that a synthetic fuels program is unnecessary because oil is cheap, I would like to remind you of long lines at the gas stations just a few short years ago, of the factories shutdown because there was not enough energy to run them and of the farmers without sufficient fuel to plant and harvest their crops. The good times we're having today—plentiful, moderately priced fuel, sufficient energy to keep the fires of industry burning—will not last forever without vision.

Based on this vision and the word of the Federal Government, western Coloradans began to prepare for the development of the vast oil shale resources which stretch for miles across that part of the country. Private companies have invested an estimated $1 billion in the two Colorado projects. These same companies and local governmental units have invested an estimated $330 million on new housing, roads, schools, sewers, and water projects to meet the needs of the expected population growth.

But here we stand again, as Congress one more time tries to pull the rug out from under the citizens of western Colorado who have so faithfully taken their Government at its word. Abandoning them now will not only cause them great personal and community harm, but in the process harm the credibility and the reliability of our Government as well.

Again, I ask you, do not be shortsighted in the matter of synthetic fuels. I urge you to vote against the resolution.

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Speaker, the status of unauthorized appropriations is an issue that has received substantial attention in both bodies in conjunction with the continuing resolution. This year, in particular, the problem was especially acute as a result of the inclusion by the other body of $7.2 billion of appropriations for defense programs that were not authorized.

Current law (section 138 of title 10, United States Code) requires that no funds be appropriated, obligated or expended unless previously authorized. The bill before us now does provide appropriations in excess of authorizations for some programs. I am disappointed that the conferees could not agree to eliminate all such instances; but I understand, as well, that information received subsequent to the consideration of the Defense Authorization Act could support requirements to fund certain programs that may be of higher priority than those authorized earlier in the year.

I am pleased, however, to note that the conferees adopted the amendment contained in the Senate bill that specifically prohibits the obligation and expenditure of funds for any purpose unless the funds have been otherwise authorized for that purpose. The floor debate in the other body suggested that the language of the provision referred to the account totals contained in the authorizing and appropriating legislation. However, as implied by the language regarding amendment 4 in the statement of managers, in order to determine the programs for which funds have been authorized and appropriated, reliance must be placed on the reports accompanying the authorization and appropriation bills, respectively.

This provision will permit the Committees on Armed Services to review those programs early next year and to provide authorization should the justification be sufficient to demonstrate that these programs merit a higher priority than others previously authorized. Until these programs are authorized, no funds may be obligated or expended on them.

I believe that the provision in the resolution before us affords an excellent procedural solution for addressing the problems caused by the period of time that elapses between the consideration of authorization and appropriation bills.

Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to express my sincere thanks to the members of the Defense Subcommittee on Appropriations for their invaluable assistance prior to and during the conference on the continuing resolution. In particular, I appreciate the time and energy devoted to this issue by the chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. ADDABBO]; the acting chairman, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CHAPPELL]; and the ranking member, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCDADE]. They could not have been more supportive of our requests. I look forward to working closely with them in the future, not only on substantive matters, but to further promote our joint efforts to ensure the viability of the authorization-appropriation process.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to explain my support of the conference report on House Joint Resolution 465, making further continuing appropriations for fiscal year 1986.

Many of my colleagues voted against this legislation when it was considered on December 16 because they strongly objected to certain of its provisions relating to defense spending. Specifically, many Members expressed strong concern about the excessive defense spending levels provided for in the legislation, the approval of chemical weapons production, and the lack of procurement reform provisions that had been passed by the House of Representatives.

I strongly share these concerns and feel that they are justified. However, I believe that those who opposed the legislation for these reasons have underestimated the value of another provision that is contained in the conference report. This is the total ban on the testing of antisatellite [Asat] weapons approved by the conferees.

The issues of overall defense spending levels, chemical weapons, and procurement reform are highly important ones. However, if action in these areas is postponed for the next few months, the resulting delay is not likely to dramatically alter United States-Soviet relations or significantly detract from current arms control efforts.

The issue of Asat testing is quite different. The United States proceeded with an Asat test in September of this year, despite a Soviet moratorium on such tests and previously enacted restraints on these tests imposed by the Congress. We have already made significant preparations for two further tests next year.

If Asat testing is permitted to continue, it is likely that Soviet testing of Asats will resume in the near future. The early warning systems of both superpowers will become vulnerable to a surprise first-strike attack, and the danger of nuclear war will increase. We will have contributed to the initiation of an entirely new arms race in space and threatened the prospects for achieving an arms agreement with the Soviets.

On the other hand, if we act to ensure that the stiff new prohibition on Asat tests contained in the continuing resolution is preserved , it is likely that such an arms race can be successfully avoided. The conference committee language denies appropriations for Asat testing under "this or any act," meaing that Asat testing will not be allowed to resume unless specific language repealing the ban is enacted in the future.

This ban on Asat tests will help guarantee the survivability of our early warning and communication satellites, thus reducing the likelihood of a surprise first strike. It will prevent the expenditure of large sums for weaponry that will reduce the security of our Nation. It will aid us in negotiating comprehensive arms agreements with the Soviet Uinon.

Defense spending levels and procurement reforms are important matters that will be debated in the coming months, But the Asat test ban achieved by the conferees represents a golden opportunity to stop an entire arms race before it begins. We cannot let this opportunity slip away. It is for this reason that I voted in favor of the conference report on House Joint Resolution 465 when it was considered and defeated on December 16, and am doing so again today when its passage is likely.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the provision in the Defense chapter of the continuing resolution that provides $11.1 million for construction and all related development costs, including costs already incurred in conceptual design, architecture, engineering and other facility and site development activities, for the Microelectronic Engineering and Imaging Sciences Center at Rochester Institute of Technology. The conference agreement recognizes that RIT was forced to begin construction and development activities in order to retain a number of substantial financial pledges made toward construction of the center by private contributors. I commend the conferees for their efforts. The advances made by this facility will make significant contributions to our national security.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time has expired.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, when the legislative bells rang indicating the vote today at 1:26 p.m., on rollcall No. 476, on the conference report on the continuing resolution, there was evidently a malfunction in my congressional office. Thus, I was unaware of the pending vote and not present on the floor. Had I been present and voting, I would have voted "nay."

DEATH GRATUITY TO SURVIVORS OF MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 3974) to amend title 10, United States Code, to include in the death gratuity payable to survivors of a member of the Armed Forces who dies on active duty an amount equivalent to 2 month' housing allowances, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 403 of title 37, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

(l)(1) The Secretary of Defense, or the Secretary of Transportation in the case of the Coast Guard when not operating as a service in the Navy, may allow the dependents of a member of the armed forces who dies in line of duty and whose dependents are occupying family housing provided by the Department of Defense, or by the Department of Transportation in the case of the Coast Guard, other than on a rental basis on the date of the member's death to continue to occupy such housing without charge for a period of 90 days.

"(2) The Secretary concerned may pay an allowance for quarters to the dependents of a member of the uniformed services who dies in line of duty and whose dependents are not occupying a housing facility under the jurisdiction of a uniformed service on the date of the member's death or are occupying such housing on a rental basis on such date, or whose dependents vacate such housing sooner than 90 days after the date of the member's death.

The amount of the allowance for quarters shall be the same amount that would be payable to the deceased member under sections 403, 403a, and 405 of this title if the member had not died. The payment of an allowance for quarters under this subsection shall terminate 90 days after the date of the member's death.".

SEC. 2. The amendments made by section 1 of this Act shall take effect December 12, 1985, and shall apply only with respect to housing for and payment of an allowance for quarters to dependents of members of the uniformed services who died on or after that date.

SEC. 3. SERVICEMEN'S GROUP LIFE INSURANCE PROGRAM.—Section 401 (c) of Public Law 99-166 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall take effect on Janaury 1, 1986.

"(2) The amendment made by subsection (a)(1)(A) shall be deemed to have taken effect on December 12, 1985, with respect to membes who—

"(A) died after December 11, 1985, and before January 1, 1986; and

"(B) were, on the date of death, insured in the amount of $35,000 under subchapter III of chapter 19 of title 38, United States Code.".

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide for temporary family housing or temporary housing allowances for dependents of members of the Armed Forces who die on or after December 12, 1985, and for other purposes.".

Mrs. SCHROEDER (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE). Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Colorado?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, under my reservation I would request the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER] to explain the resolution. I know it has come back from the other body, and I would ask the gentlewoman to explain the import of what she is offering at the present time.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentlewoman from Colorado.

□ 1350

Mrs. SCHROEDER. I thank the gentleman from Alabama for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday morning we passed H.R. 3974 to help the surviving family members of the victims of the Gander crash by supplementing the death gratuity paid to survivors of deceased service members with 2 months' worth of housing allowances. Shortly after we acted, the other body passed legislation on the same subject. Their bill, however, made payments discretionary, not an entitlement.

After some discussions yesterday, we arrived at a compromise. Last evening, the other body took the House-passed bill, struck the text, and inserted the text of the compromise. That is what is before us now.

The compromise authorizes the Secretary of Defense—or the Secretary of Transportation for purposes of the Coast Guard—to permit dependents to remain in family housing for 90 days after the death of the member and to pay the basic allowance for quarters [BAQ] and variable housing allowance [VHA] to those who live off base. The House-passed measure only provided for 60 days worth of benefits.

To avoid creating an undesirable incentive for people to remain in free family housing for the full 3 months, the compromise tells the Secretary to pay the BAQ and VHA to survivors for the remaining time between the time they move out of family housing and the end of the 90 days. While we do not want to create a false incentive to have survivors remain in family housing longer than they otherwise would, we do not want commanding officers to push survivors out before the end of the 90 days. The intent is to be neutral: Let them stay as long as they want, up to 90 days, but don't encourage them, by financial incentives, to remain longer than they otherwise would.

The compromise does not provide for an entitlement. It permits the Secretary to deny those benefits only in the exceptional case where the death does not occur in the line of duty. This "line of duty" language has been in the United States Code since the Revolutionary War and has been interpreted very broadly. Clearly, the people on the flight that crashed in Gander died in the line of duty. An off-duty soldier killed by police while robbing a 7-Eleven would not be killed in the line of duty. The discretion of the Secretary to deny benefits under this compromise is very limited. I would be surprised if there was one denial every 10 years.

Moreover, once benefits are provided, they must be provided for the full 90 days. There is no discretion to provide them for a shorter period.

Under the compromise, people in family housing would continue to live there free. Those off base or in Government housing for which there is a rental charge would continue to pay rent but would continue to receive the BAQ and VHA to pay the rent for 90 days. Essentially, the compromise tries to preserve the status quo for the survivors. So, in the case of a service member who had no dependents and who was living in barracks or aboard ship at the time of death, there would be no additional payment to the estate.

Under the House-passed bill, the benefits were all payable promptly at the time of the service member's death because they were part of the death gratuity. Under the compromise, the benefits are payable just like the BAQ and VHA are now. However, I think it would be appropriate to permit advance payments in cases of special need.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] was retained in the compromise with a technical correction. The new language specifies that the increased life insurance benefit applies only to those who had previously elected the maximum benefit and only to the Serviceman's Group Life Insurance Program. The Veterans' Affairs Committee agrees to those changes.

I think the compromise is reasonable. We strengthened the bill by extending the benefits from 60 days to 90 days but we weakened the bill by turning it from an entitlement into a discretionary program. I still think this bill is worthy of our strong support.

Mr. DICKINSON. I thank the gentlewoman, and if I might reiterate what I understood to be the answer, yesterday what we authorized was that when anyone is killed on active duty; instead of his housing allowance being immediately terminated, we authorize the Secretary of Defense to extend the housing allowance for his dependents for 2 months.

The Senate amended that, as I understand, by extending it from 2 months to 3 months; but that is the only substantive change within the bill. We are simply saying that if the Senate wants 3 months we will give them 3 months, and it is still discretionary.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. If the gentleman will yield further, there is one other technical provision which I think also makes sense. That is, the Senate says that it can be a payment even if they move out. They do not want to create a false incentive to fill up housing, with people feeling they should live there the entire 3 months, because we know how precious family housing is; and I think all of us would agree that that 3-month transition period is very critical.

So they did that also, and we wanted it to be an absolute entitlement; they made it a tad bit more discretionary, but I think it is so important that it get done that we move on it.

In essence, it is where we were.

Mr. DICKINSON. Well, this only covers the period from December 11 to 31 of this month anyway. A very nominal amount is involved. I think it is not only humanitarian, but it is common sense, and I would certainly urge support of it.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. Further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I really appreciate that, because really I should refer a mixture of a question and a statement to both Members.

As generous as this may sound, I think it is a heinous perversion of priorities. The Arrow private charter airline is still in business with the Defense Department.

The 248 who died were a battalion-size group. We are continuing to do what we did all during Vietnam—that is, we would ship the live soldier on a charter craft over to the receiving point at the scene of battle, and the only way we would use military craft would be to bring the ashes or the body of that dead soldier back. We continue to do that.

Mr. DICKINSON. All right——

Mr. GONZALEZ. Also——

Mr. DICKINSON. If I might reclaim my time, I think the gentleman might like to hear some facts.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Certainly.

Mr. DICKINSON. This was a peacekeeping group that was sent to the Sinai. It was part of the U.N. team. The U.N. made the contract; the United Nations. They chose from a list of certified, FAA-approved carriers, furnish by the Air Force. The State Department signed the contract.

Now, I have been in touch with the Secretary of Defense. This day I have sent him a letter, and I have assurances from him that not only is the FAA reviewing its certification procedures, but I have urged on him that no more American personnel, regardless of the contract by the United Nations, be allowed to be transported under contract by Arrow until the investigation is completed.

We cannot do more than that, and we have done that. Now, the gentleman can get up here and berate what has happened in the past, but I am telling the gentleman that is how it happened, that is where we are now; there is nothing else we can do about it.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Let me say this, though. This is just this one case, this one contract.

Mr. DICKINSON. Well, that is all we are dealing with, this one case.

Mr. GONZALEZ. No, but it may be——

Mr. DICKINSON. I am talking about the policy. The United Nations chartered this aircraft; the United Nations. We do not do it.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I know.

Mr. DICKINSON. Well, all right, we are making the FAA reexamine the certification——

Mr. GONZALEZ. I am addressing——

Mr. DICKINSON. And the State Department issued the contract. They are reexamining the whole thing.

Now we can sit here and beat the drum all day, without doing any good; we might make a little press, but that is it.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Well, if the gentleman will kindly yield again.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, briefly.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I think the gentleman has not caught the thrust of my inquiry. It has nothing to do with anything but American military; whether they are on the——

Mr. DICKINSON. Would you like them to fly in the belly of a C130 with no chairs in it, or a C5A with no chairs in it? They have to charter commercial aircraft in order to transport people. We do not have enough military aircraft within the Air Force to transport troops without using charter. It has to be.

Now, what else does the gentleman want?

Mr. GONZALEZ. What I want is a change in that policy so that the military will transport the military.

Mr. DICKINSON. I am telling the gentleman that it will—change in the policies; what else can I tell you?

Mr. GONZALEZ. Well, let us get the money in there.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentlewoman.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. I thank the gentleman from Alabama for yielding. I think what we are doing is missing the point.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, when this came up, we talked to the distinguished chairman of the Investigations Subcommittee; he said they are doing everything they can. The distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DICKINSON] is pointing out what he is doing and basically what we are trying to do is correct this in the law so the families will not suffer anymore; and I think all the other things are on the burner, too, but this is the main thing that we have in front of us today, and it is very important.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentlewoman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 3974, the legislation just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. WRIGHT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WRIGHT. There is one remaining bill which must be passed; that being the reconciliation bill, which contains savings to which the Congress has committed itself, and the budget, and also extends certain programs which otherwise will expire.

I understand from the conferees that they are on the verge of an agreement, and that we can expect that bill back and a rule to accompany it by perhaps 4 o'clock this afternoon, and then it would be my purpose, therefore, to ask unanimous consent that, at the option of the Chair, a recess may be declared until 4 o'clock this afternoon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object. At least as far as this gentleman understands, Mr. Speaker, it is our duty to originate the sine die adjournment resolution; that that is to be originated on this side of the Capitol.

Before granting recess authority, I am wondering if we could get some agreement that we will put that resolution for adjournment, sine die adjournment, on the floor at this point; get that business taken care of, so that the only remaining business that we have is the reconciliation bill?

Mr. WRIGHT. If the gentleman will yield.

Mr. WALKER. Be glad to yield under my reservation.

Mr. WRIGHT. It was the wish of the leadership, and I think perhaps it is agreeable to the leadership on your side as well, that we handle that after we have handled the vote upon the reconciliation. We would like for Members to understand that this is an important part of the agenda of the Congress, and rather than passing an adjournment resolution at this time which might convey the mistaken encouragement that Members should expect to go home without an action on the reconciliation bill, we think that it would be more appropriate to offer the reconciliation bill first and then act on our adjournment resolution, which I take it will not be controversial.

□ 1400

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me under his reservation?

Mr. WALKER. Further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that the Banking Committee is trying to get something resolved in the housing area, and until such time we still have pending a very important piece of legislation which has to be disposed of, which is an FHA extender.

So I would ask that we not forget the fact that we have to dispose of or take care of an FHA extender before we leave.

Mr. WALKER. That is exactly my point.

Mr. Speaker, all of a sudden we have not one bill but at least one more bill, and we are going to end up, it seems to me, getting several more unless we get on the record that we intend to adjourn sine die here. It seems to me this may be the appropriate time to bring that resolution to the floor, to adjourn the House sine die upon adjournment of the House today, and begin to move that process forward right now before we get a series of bills out here on the floor.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

If the House recesses, we are likely to be in recess for an extended period of time. All we will do is give the conference committee longer to do all of the wonderful things that it wants to do to put together some kind of a package. If the House stays in session, it will put some pressure on that committee to bring us something in a timely fashion, providing we have passed the adjournment resolution. The gentleman from the Banking Committee, the distinguished chairman, has a bill, Ways and Means Committee has some tax extensions, I am told, and other things.

I think it would be a real mistake to allow this committee to recess because we will run another one of these midnight routes.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my unanimous-consent request.

SUPPORTING DONATION OF THE FORMER PRESIDENTIAL YACHT "SEQUOIA" TO THE U.S. NAVY

Mr. SISISKY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 98) to recognize the historical significance of the former Presidential yacht Sequoia, and express support for her donation to the U.S. Navy by the Presidential Yacht Trust and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. LOWERY of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object, but I yield to the gentleman from Virginia so that he might explain to the House the details of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia for that purpose.

Mr. SISISKY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the former Presidential yacht Sequoia is not of great historical significance, but takes on its extraordinary uniqueness in that she is to be returned to service without expense to the American taxpayer.

Sequoia served eight Presidents of the United States over a period of 44 years, from Herbert Hoover to Gerald R. Ford, and a review of her role during that period is much like a synopsis of major world events—from President Roosevelt's shipboard planning of both war and domestic strategy, to President Truman's hosting of the first conference on nuclear controls, to President Nixon's meetings with Soviet President Brezhnev during the 1973 summit.

Following her disposal in 1977 by President Carter, Sequoia passed through several private owners before being acquired by the bipartisan, nonprofit Presidential Yacht Trust for historical preservation in 1981. Over the ensuing years, the Presidential Yacht Trust has undertaken informational and public service programs with Sequoia, including significant support for other charities and its much acclaimed 1984 national tour which took the Sequoia to over 100 cities in 16 States. Through these and other programs, tens of thousands of Americans have had the unique, personal opportunity to visit and demonstrate support for Sequoia's preservation and return to service.

In recent months, the Presidential Yacht Trust, in consultation with the Naval Historical Society, has determined that the proper future and role for the Sequoia is her return to service as the Presidential yacht. The trust has undertaken steps that would accomplish such a remarkable comeback of this truly historic vessel under the very best of circumstances.

First, the trust will donate Sequoia to the U.S. Navy no later than November 15, 1988, as a gift from the trust and American people.

Second, prior to her donation, Sequoia will be totally restored by the trust in preparation for her future service.

Third, at the time of donation, the trust will provide an endowment sufficient for Sequoia's future operations and maintenance.

The Sequoia project is first and foremost an effort of significant historical preservation—with the added benefit of her future service at no cost to American taxpayers.

We believe this resolution, endorsing the return of Sequoia to Government service, is an important step in assuring continued private financial support of the endowment fund and public awareness of this important project.

Under plans developed by the Presidential Yacht Trust and the Naval Historical Society, the former Presidential yacht Sequoia would be returned to service in the U.S. Navy as the Presidential yacht by November 15, 1988, under the following conditions:

First, Sequoia's return to service would be by donation from the Presidential Yacht Trust to the U.S. Navy.

Second, prior to her donation, Sequoia would be fully restored—at no cost to the Government—and in first-class operating condition suitable for her new use.

Third, prior to her donation, legislation would be sought to recognize Sequoia's historical importance and to protect her from future disposal.

Fourth, at the time of donation, the Presidential Yacht Trust would provide an endowment sufficient to cover costs of Sequoia's operations and maintenance in perpetuity.

These plans provide for Sequoia's return to active service under the very best of circumstances. This historical vessel, which served eight Presidents of the United States would be: First, restored; second, donated by the bipartisan, nonprofit Presidential Yacht Trust as a gift of the American people; and third, available for future service at no cost to the taxpayer.

Mr. LOWERY of California. Further reserving the right to object, as the gentleman from Virginia pointed out, the Sequoia is a national treasure. It has been the location of numerous summits. It is very important to our heritage. The Presidential Yacht Trust will turn over the U.S. Navy fully endowed so there will be no further costs to the American taxpayer, no further appropriations.

Mr. Speaker, this measure has been cleared with the minority on the Committee on Armed Services and likewise has been cleared by the Republican leadership, and the U.S. Navy has no objection to its adoption.

Mr. Speaker, I urge approval of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate concurrent resolution, as follows:

S. CON. RES. 98

Whereas the former Presidential yacht Sequoia served eight Presidents of the United States, from Herbert Hoover to Gerald R. Ford, over a period of forty-four years;

Whereas the Sequoia was the setting for Presidential meetings, negotiations and decisions of extraordinary significance for and effect on the history of the United States and the course of world events;

Whereas the Sequoia was disposed of in 1977 to reduce Federal expenditures;

Whereas in recognition of Sequoia's unique historical significance, the private, bipartisan, and nonprofit Presidential Yacht Trust was established in 1981 for the purpose of restoring and preserving Sequoia;

Whereas since 1981 many Americans have visited the Sequoia and demonstrated support for her preservation and return to service;

Whereas in response to this support, the Presidential Yacht Trust, in consultation with the United States Navy, has determined that the proper future of the Sequoia is her return to Government service in the United States Navy as the Presidential yacht; and

Whereas the Presidential Yacht Trust has taken steps to fully restore the Sequoia by November 15, 1988, to donate her to the Navy as a gift of the Presidential Yacht Trust and the American people, and to establish an endowment sufficient for her future operation and maintenance: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), that Congress—

(1) recognizes the unique significance of the former Presidential yacht Sequoia which has made her a symbol of American political heritage and the Office of the President;

(2) supports the plans of the Presidential Yacht Trust to donate the Sequoia, with an endowment sufficient for her operations and maintenance, to the United States Navy for service once again as the presidential yacht.

The Senate concurrent resolution was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SISISKY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on Senate Concurrent Resolution 98, the Senate concurrent resolution just concurred in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 2451

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have my name removed as a cosponsor of the bill, H.R. 2451.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

RESCINDING APPROVAL OF HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 262, CORRECTING ENROLLMENT OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 187, DIRECTING THE CLERK TO MAKE CORRECTION IN ENROLLMENT OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 187

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 263), and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 263

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the approval of H. Con. Res. 262, correcting the enrollment of H.J. Res. 187, is hereby rescinded and in lieu thereof the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall make the following correction in the enrollment of said H.J. Res. 187, to approve the "Compact of Free Association", and for other purposes:

In the second sentence of subsection (1) of section 105, after the words "Fish and Wildlife Service," insert "the National Marine Fisheries Service,".

Mr. SEIBERLING (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the concurrent resolution be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand this is the legislation that makes a correction in the correction that was made yesterday to the correction that was made several days before that?

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield under his reservation?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, under my reservation I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

No, this is a correction of the correcting resolution of yesterday which corrected the original bill, the Compact of Free Association.

Yesterday's resolution had a typographical error in it which we did not catch.

Mr. WALKER. Further reserving the right to object, may I inquire of the gentleman, the bill goes no further than that, making that correction?

Mr. SEIBERLING. If the gentleman will yield further, that is absolutely all that it does.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The concurrent resolution was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the matter just acted upon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION REPORTED BY COMMITTEE ON RULES PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3128, DEFICIT REDUCTION AMENDMENTS OF 1985

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 342 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 342

Resolved, That during the remainder of the first session of the Ninety-ninth Congress, the requirement of clause 4(b) of rule XI for a two-thirds vote to consider a report from the Committee on Rules on the same day reported is hereby waived against any resolution reported from that committee providing for the consideration of a conference report, or any amendment reported from conference in disagreement, on the bill (H.R. 3128) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 2 of the first concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1986 (S. Con. Res. 32, Ninety-ninth Congress).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LATTA] pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 342 is a very simple and straightforward rule. It waives the rule of the House, clause 4(b) of rule XI, which requires that no resolution reported from the Committee on Rules can be considered in the House on the same day it is reported from the Committee on Rules unless the House by a two-thirds vote agrees to consider such resolution. This rule is waived solely for any resolution subsequently reported by the Committee on Rules providing for the consideration of a conference report, or any amendment reported from the conference in disagreement, on the bill H.R. 3128, the Deficit Reduction Amendments of 1985.

Under the provisions of clause 4(b) of rule XI, a two-thirds vote for consideration of a rule in the House on the same day it is reported from the Committee on Rules is not applicable during the last 3 days of the session of Congress. However, since we have not as of this date adopted an adjournment resolution for the 1st session of the 99th Congress, this provision of clause 4(b) had not become operative to negate the need for a two-thirds vote to consider a rule on the floor on the same day it is reported from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. Speaker, as my colleagues are aware, the conferees on H.R. 3128 are close to reaching agreement on a conference report. Disposition of the Deficit Reduction Amendments of 1985 should be completed before the 1st session of the 99th Congress adjourns. While it is unfortunate that the conference report must be brought forth for this 11th-hour consideration, failure to act would be a grave mistake. The conference report represents the commitment of the Congress to take positive action to implement the fiscal goals we set forth with adoption of the Budget Resolution on August 1. Failure to act will demonstrate that, in fact, we do not have the will to reduce the deficit.

The Rules Committee reported House Resolution 342 earlier this week in anticipation of a late agreement and filing on H.R. 3128. Later today, our committee will hold an emergency meeting and consider a rule waiving points of order against the conference report. Adoption by the House of the rule currently under consideration will permit the consideration of the rule on the conference report today without the requirement that two-thirds of Members present and voting agree to its consideration. The rule reported today would still need the concurrence of a majority of the House to make the conference report in order. Adoption of the resolution now under considering will serve to clear the way for the House to dispose of H.R. 3128 and finally allow the session to come to a close.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the rule.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, very briefly, this rule provides that you can bring up the reconciliation on the same day that the Rules Committee reports it out. The gentleman has indicated we will probably be going into the Rules Committee, if this rule is agreed to, about a quarter of 3. But there are some controversial matters in that conference report on reconciliation. I think that certainly if we are going to pass that conference report on reconciliation today the Rules Committee is going to have to take this under advisement and to make a couple of amendments to that conference report. I have reference to the value-added tax that this House voted on. They voted that they did not want to come up with a new system of taxation that could be added to every time you turn around or every time they needed money.

The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means was unalterably opposed to it, but, unfortunately, he was rolled in committee.

We now have back, or will have back, before this House a matter that the House has expressed its will on, namely, the value-added tax.

Second, there is an item dealing with teenage pregnancies that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] is very much interested in.

Mr. Speaker, for that purpose I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker and ladies and gentlemen of the House, this reconciliation bill is going to be very controversial. In addition to the value-added tax and other issues, the bill has within its confines a new program, a Teenage Pregnancy Program, which passed the House with an amendment which said none of the funds in this new program may be used to counsel for abortion or to refer teenage pregnant girls for abortion.

With that proviso, it passed. That was stripped in the conference by the gentlemen in the other body, and they have been intransigent in our efforts to get it back in.

So now we are going to have a new program that provides Federal funds for teenage girls who are pregnant, to counsel them and refer them for abortions.

That is something that I cannot stand idly by and let happen. I am going to resist it as much as I can. I think a defeat of this resolution will go a long way toward perhaps a reconsideration by the conferees at the unwisdom of their injecting this new program with this new proabortion dimension into this important legislation at this late hour.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Ohio have any other requests for time?

Mr. LATTA. If the gentleman will yield, yes, I have three requests for time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes, for purposes of debate only, to the majority leader, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT].

□ 1415

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, we are deciding right now whether we can consider the reconciliation bill today or not. If this resolution is voted down, it means one of two things. Either we leave without considering the reconciliation bill and, in so doing, betray the promise we made to make certain deficit reductions, or, on the other hand, it means that we have to be in session tomorrow.

I think everyone has operated upon the clear assumption that this was the last day of the session. We intend to adjourn at the end of the day. I think it would just doom any effort to have a reconciliation bill of any kind if we were to reject this amendment at this time. For that reason, I would plead with Members of all types and political persuasions, whatever their individual objection to any measure contained in the reconciliation bill may be, to weigh that alongside the importance of the House as an institution being able to fulfill its commitment to deficit reduction.

We boldly, and I think honestly and earnestly, made the commitment that we would make the specific reductions in the deficit. If we do not pass this bill, we will have betrayed that commitment. Therefore, it seems to me important that we at least grant the privilege to the Rules Committee of letting us have an opportunity to vote on whatever the conferees agree to, so that a judgment may be made at that time.

If the gentleman from Illinois or others have objections at that time, depending upon what is contained in the conference committee report, they certainly would be within their rights to vote against the conference committee report. But it seems plausible to me that if we were to reject this request, we would either be dooming the Congress to having to be in session tomorrow, which I do not think likely, or even possible, because I do not think we would be able to retain a quorum, or, on the other hand, dooming us to fail to make our commitment to deficit reduction.

Therefore, I would urge the gentlemen to reconsider and not to oppose this rule, but to let us at least consider the conference committee report in a timely way so that whatever happens, then we can adjourn this evening and go home.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, in response to the majority leader, I am the last person in the world who wants to cause discomfort or slow down the exodus from this city at this time of the year. But sometimes you run into a brick wall and people are, in my characterization, unreasonable. They inject controversial issues into otherwise important bills at the 11th hour, when you have no opportunity to debate them in a deliberative fashion. And so one uses what limited little tools one has. And this happens to be one limited little tool.

So being truthful to myself in what I believe in, I have to do what I can to get some reason to penetrate Mount Olympus where these gentleman reside, and I intend to do so.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HYDE. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I understand and respect the views of my colleagues on this issue. While I think generally I have stood with my colleague on this issue, and plan to today in committee if this issue is brought up, I will tell him, I do not know where the votes will be in committee, quite frankly. I do not know who is left here this afternoon to vote. But I would hope we would be able to go through with this resolution and pass it and then take it as it comes within the next hour, I suspect, up in the Rules Committee. If we have the votes to sustain the position that both you and I hold to bring it to the floor, then so be it. I cannot assure you that we do, I cannot assure you that we do not. But I hope we would not delay the proceedings here.

Mr. HYDE. Would the gentleman give me some assurances that I would have an opportunity, then, as a result of the rule that is going to be issued shortly, to offer an amendment on the floor to restore the House language to this section?

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. I would suggest to the gentleman that I will be helpful in trying to get that accomplished upstairs. I cannot guarantee you, though, that we are going to have the votes to do that.

Mr. HYDE. Have you any influence over Mr. FROST, who is sitting there?

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Well, he sits in front of me, so——

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 seconds.

Let me assure the gentleman from Illinois that I will do everything I possibly can to see that the House has an opportunity to vote on this matter.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DAUB].

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of either of the gentlemen on the Rules Committee if it is possible that this particular request be withdrawn at this time for the purpose of a Rules Committee meeting to, in fact, issue the rule, after which time I think all of us would then be comfortable waiving the two-thirds requirement but up until the time that we are aware of what that rule will contain, not only the concern of the gentleman from Illinois, but let me say this gentleman is most concerned about having to take the VAT, for the purpose of funding Superfund, out of a rule granted for the purpose of reconciliation.

I recognize that is not this body's wish that that particular predicament is posed to us by the other body; but, nonetheless, it is the problem.

So it seems to me we could solve all of this dilemma by knowing what the rule itself would contain and avoid the need for this rule to waive the two-thirds requirement, which is the only protection we have at this point.

I yield to a Rules Committee member for an answer.

Mr. FROST. In answer to the gentleman, the committee will not withdraw the request. The committee intends to proceed with the rule at this point.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAUB. I yield to the majority leader.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, let me just appeal to the gentleman's broader sense of responsibility.

I respect the view of the gentleman from Illinois with regard to the question of teenage pregnancies and abortion. I respect the view of the gentleman now in the well.

It is impossible to get total agreement on the part of all of our colleagues with regard to the content of a conference committee report. That is what we have conferees for. And I just ask anybody in this House to put against the overriding question his individual objection to something that may or may not be in the rule. If we do not adopt this rule at this time, we are not going to have a reconciliation bill.

Now, if we do not have a reconciliation bill, here is what it will cost the taxpayers of the United States every day of the year to come: It is going to cost $200 million a day.

Now, if you are willing to take that responsibility on your shoulders, vote against this rule. If you are willing to allow us to have the opportunity to adopt a rule when it comes and have a chance to vote in a majority fashion on the conference report, then vote for this rule.

Mr. DAUB. Let me say—and this may not be a direct enough response to the distinguished majority leader—if indeed we waive the two-thirds requirement now, get a rule that includes some of the things that are objectionable, pass that particular reconciliation bill with those matters contained therein, send it to the other body and their intransigence continues, we are still without reconciliation.

I say to the distinguished majority leader and to all of my colleagues that while I would wish reconciliation, I would not wish it at the expense of this body being pushed around on the last day of the session.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, let us make it very clear: We can bring reconciliation to the floor even if we do not have this rule, because the rules of the House allow another rule to be brought out here that would commend a two-thirds vote.

What we are trying to do is get by the rules of the House which demand that if you are going to bring a rule on an emergency basis to the floor, that you get a two-thirds vote.

Well, what will that do? That will put some pressure on the Rules Committee to come up with a rule and make in order a reconciliation bill that has a chance of getting a two-thirds vote on the rule.

What does that mean? Well, it means that they are going to have to deal with the value-added tax issue, it means they are going to have to deal with the abortion issue.

It seems to me that is what we want to force at the present time; we want to have them deal with those two issues in a way that at least gives the Members of this House a chance to speak to those very important issues.

If we pass this rule and confine ourselves to a majority vote, what the majority leader seems to be telling us is, he will not bring reconciliation forward. Then it is his fault. It is not the fault of this House. It will be the fault of the Democratic leadership for not bringing reconciliation forward.

I say we ought to reject this rule and give ourselves the rights for the Members to take up the legislation under the order of the House. The order of the House would command that if we bring a rule to the floor today on this matter, it be passed by two-thirds of the membership. That is what we ought to operate under. There is no reason why the Rules Committee cannot craft a rule on this matter that will get a two-thirds vote here later this afternoon. That is what we ought to do. We ought to reject this rule, we ought to bring forward a rule later on which takes the two-thirds vote, and then we ought to move from there to the reconciliation bill which then would have the support obviously of a majority of the Members of this House.

That is the pattern that is going to get us reconciliation, that is the pattern that is going to save us the $200 million a day. We certainly are not going to get it if we go along with this particular process.

This particular process only assures that those people in the House who want to force down the throats of the American people unacceptable abortion language, and want to force down the throats of the American people a value-added tax, get their way. This particular rule should be rejected.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, if we pass this rule, the House will be conceding any leverage it has on the reconciliation bill.

It has already been pointed out that there are two issues which are dripping with controversy. One of them is the VAT tax which this House rejected very recently. Unless the Rules Committee exercises heroic measures, which I hope it will do, that VAT tax, the national sales tax, will be visited on the United States of America. A majority of this House has said by vote that it does not want that to happen.

Even though we believe that the Rules Committee will do its darndest to take care of the problem in its rules, we have no assurance that it will be able to do so. Without a guarantee, I, and many others, are going to vote against this rule because we don't know the shape of the rule that the Rules Committee will bring to us.

The other item in dispute deals with abortion counseling. I am a little surprised to find myself agreeing with my friend from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] on this subject, but I have no choice. He is dead right. He would be crazy if he gave up the leverage he has, because his uncertainty over abortion must be as great as mine with the VAT. He must protect his position against Senate language not in the House version. I agree with, and will support, that position.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman. from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I just want to point out that there is a third issue here about which I raised the awareness of the body before.

Mr. FRENZEL. Be my guest.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Also contained herein, somehow sneaking in, is that we should continue indefinitely the club over the States to raise the drinking age. I intend to vote against the rule for that reason.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. There are at least three highly controversial items, and perhaps more, in the reconciliation bill.

Mr. Speaker, the body ought to be able to see very readily that we have got a big problem here. Members are not going to give up their rights until we see the rule in question.

The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that this House and its leadership has been dilatory in bringing this bill to the floor. In 1981, we had reconciliation in August.

We are obligated by law to pass a budget resolution in May. We should be reconciled before the August recess. Instead, we have sat around and diddled, and picked our nose, and made pious statements, for 6 months. And still the bill was not brought to the floor.

After both Houses passed reconciliation bills we still sat and fiddled for 3 weeks before we went into conference. It is utterly ridiculous that we should sit around here for 6 months for political reasons, and then at the last moment have all of these controversial items dumped on us.

We are being asked to surrender whatever principles we have for the greater glory of saving a few bucks for the majority leader each day. For the record, after subtracting the effect of other bills, there is but $12 billion in savings over 3 years in the bill.

□ 1430

As far as I am concerned, the reconciliation bill was a cream puff to begin with. It is not going to do a great deal of good for our budget distress. It would be better if we went back and started over again.

Mr. Speaker, I urge a no vote on the rule.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, let me just point out one thing that we seem to be overlooking here. All this rule does is to provide that we will not have to have a two-thirds vote to bring up the rule that might come out in the Rules Committee, and as the majority leader has pointed out, we could be in session tomorrow, so we would not have to have a two-thirds vote if this goes down.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTA. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is absolutely correct. I agree 100 percent with the position taken by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL]. I agree 100 percent with the position on the issue here as advocated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE]. If Members would work as hard on sustaining the majorities that they have sustained on a bad issue or on the abortion issue as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] has challenged the leadership of this House to work, there would not be any problem.

If Members want to get out of here tomorrow, we have got to pass this resolution today, and we will bring a rule here to the floor which will give them, I believe, an opportunity to express themselves on both of these issues.

Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTA. I yield to the gentlewoman from Rhode Island.

Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, I must take issue with the whole procedure of acting expediently in order for us to move out of here. There is very little question of what we are doing insofar as working to assure that we not have a value-added tax, that we not have a consumer tax. The members of this party have worked exceedingly hard and members of the gentleman's own party have worked exceedingly diligently in assuring that.

It seems to me that this is a procedural opportunity we are entitled to. For the gentleman to say we ought to hurry up and get out of here because of Christmas, I think, is irresponsible when we are talking about the levying of a value-added tax that will assure us of an increased weight on the consumer for not only today but for years to come. I think this is the kind of a move that citizens should be up in arms about.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LATTA] has expired.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1½ minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I am being led to believe from the majority side, especially by the members of the Rules Committee, that they will be agreeable to a rule, if this particular resolution we now have under consideration is agreed to, and that we will have a rule out of the Rules Committee that will provide an opportunity to vote on these two matters. Am I correct in that?

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTA. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas to answer the question.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LATTA] that I will respond to his question in this way:

There can be no assurance that there will be individual amendments made in order. There may well be, given the past voting patterns in the Rules Committee, as the gentleman knows, but until those votes are taken in the Rules Committee there can be no assurance.

However, if the gentleman is not successful in getting separate votes on these issues, then he obviously has a remedy; he can vote against the rule when it comes back and he may be able to defeat the rule if we do not take those matters in consideration.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTA. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST] has stated it well, given the past voting histories of members of the Rules Committee, and on the question the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] raises and on the value-added tax we will be sustained.

The reason I cannot give the gentleman assurances is that I frankly do not know who is going to be around when we meet in an hour or so. But my position is very clear on this, as I believe is that of the gentleman from Ohio and other members of the committee. We will try to do the best we can to sustain the House with regard to the value-added tax.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTA. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to ask the gentleman from Michigan or the gentleman from Texas, is there anything to prevent postponing action on this rule following on with what the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DAUB] was suggesting, and then rolling this resolution into another rule that would be offered later on today with a VAT amendment in order and with language permitting the consideration of the Campbell amendment?

By way of background, let me advise Members that as approved by the House, section 302 of H.R. 3128 established a new $150 million teenage pregnancy program under title IV of the Social Security Act. That program passed the House without substantial debate only because it included a provision on abortion introduced by Representative CARROLL CAMPBELL and approved by the House Ways and Means Committee. The Campbell amendment forbids any part of this program from becoming involved in the performance of abortions, and forbids all counseling for abortions except where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term.

Both parts of the Campbell amendment were vitally important. Certainly a program designed to help teenage mothers and their children to achieve self-sufficiency should not be engaged in the destruction of those children prior to birth. Certainly programs subsidized by Federal funds should not be advocating abortions for teenagers, particularly in circumstances where Congress so strongly opposes abortion that it forbids the use of Federal funds to support it through the Hyde amendment.

On December 12, the House-Senate conference dealing with this program suddenly deleted the Campbell amendment. This amounts to a blatant effort to force upon this body a policy which it would never approve on its merits: a policy of allowing federally funded programs to perform and promote abortions among young people. I urge my colleagues not to be forced into this intolerable situation by the pressure to complete consideration of this bill.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think it behooves the Rules Committee to give us our shot at it, as well as those including myself who oppose the VAT.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, in response to the gentleman's question, it cannot be rolled into one rule. There has to be a separate vote on the question of the two-thirds. They are two separate items.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LATTA] has again expired.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LATTA. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I would just ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST], what then prevents us from withdrawing the resolution right now and coming back at a later time?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTA. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The point is, though, that what we could have is to have the Rules Committee come up with a rule and then bring down a separate rule waiving the two-thirds requirement, and then we could have a vote on the rule itself making in order the question of reconciliation, so that we would be operating from a real base of knowledge here, knowing what the rule is that we are waiving the two-thirds requirement on.

That was specifically refused as a procedure. It would have been a far better procedure, particularly since it is admitted that we do not even know what Rules Committee members are in town. We do not have any idea what they may be able to do and what they cannot do. It would be a far better procedure to proceed in that way than the way in which we are proceeding right now.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, it is my understanding that the Rules Committee is going into session at 2:45. Why not hold this up now and go on and see what the Rules Committee produces?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LATTA] has expired.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, in response to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER], let me say that we cannot do what he has suggested because that would be a new rule coming out of the Rules Committee which in and of itself would have to lay over for 24 hours. The only procedure that we can follow is the procedure we are pursuing at this moment.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTA. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat confused by the last exchange. Is the gentleman telling us that the Rules Committee cannot withdraw this present rule and bring it back a little bit later, after we know what the rule is?

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, in response to the gentleman's question and the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, under the rules of the House, any rule that comes out of the Rules Committee must lay over for 24 hours. If we withdrew this and brought back a new rule at a later time, we would then have to get a two-thirds vote for that.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, let me clarify that. What the gentleman is saying is absolutely true, but that is not answering the question of the gentleman from California.

Mr. LUNGREN. My question is, why not withdraw this rule and then bring this rule back later? That is my question.

Mr. LATTA. There is not any question that they could do that, but the leadership does not want to do that.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LATTA. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, I have heard the expression of concern from the majority leader suggesting that we ought to act now and give up our principles here in the cause of the greater good, and it just seems to me that if we can hurl that argument one way, we can hurl it back and suggest that "you've got a problem here, folks."

It seems to me that if you are concerned about it, you can withdraw this rule until you show us what kind of a rule you are going to come up with, because you have said to us that you cannot give us a commitment that will cover the things people are concerned about, and at such time as you bring it back you can probably pass it and we can get this mess over with.

But right now you are telling us we should get rid of our leverage that we have about important issues, issues that we consider of the highest concern, because we are going to rush to get away for Christmas. We should have been out of here on October 3, and we are here now late in December.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LATTA] has again expired.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTA. I am happy to yield to the gentlewoman from Rhode Island.

Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to add briefly that if we are talking about the Christmas rush, I would like to remind my colleagues that the President has made it very clear in conference, in letters, and in various sectors that he will veto reconciliation if it contains the value-added tax. So we are going to be back where we are right now today unless we keep that in mind. There is no point in our rushing ahead with a faulty bill that includes the value-added tax.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, in response to the question just posed, the committee will not withdraw the rule. We will proceed on this rule at this time.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman yielded back all of his time?

Mr. LATTA. I have reserved my time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, the issue is very clear. The issue is whether we want to vote on reconciliation or not today. Those Members who do not want to vote on reconciliation today or who are not happy with the rule that is granted by the Rules Committee will have the opportunity to vote "no" on that rule when it is reported out later this day. They clearly have their remedy. All this does is to permit us to consider a rule on reconciliation today, and if that rule is passed, then we will vote on reconciliation today.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of this rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 239, nays 136, answered "present" 1, not voting 58, as follows:

SHUTDOWN OF SHUTTLE FLIGHT TODAY

(Mr. NELSON of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, I want you to know how much I appreciate your encouragement, your prayers.

We counted down all the way to "T" minus 14 seconds this morning. That is 7 seconds away from main ignition. At that point the automatic sequencer shut down the countdown because of a failure of one of the hydraulic pressure units in one of the solid rocket boosters, which are the big boosters that produce 2.9 million pounds of thrust, each one of them.

NASA made the decision that they have to change this out and replace it because of the failure of that unit, so they are going to give all of those folks who have been processing this so hard for the last several weeks Christmas off and they are going to recycle and we are going to launch on January 4.

I want to assure you that I have heeded the advice of my colleague, the gentleman from Florida, DANTE FASCELL when I get up there that I will not touch any buttons.

I want all my colleagues to know how grateful I am for your encouragement. It is an honor for me to represent this House and I will try to do you proud.

Merry Christmas.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS TO HAVE UNTIL 6 P.M., TUESDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1985, TO FILE LEGISLATIVE REPORT AND OVERSIGHT REPORTS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Government Operations have until 6 p.m., December 31, 1985, to file one legislative report and four oversight reports, as follows:

Legislative report:

H.R. 3291, Federal Civilian Employee and Contractor Travel Expenses Act (per diem).

Oversight reports:

1. Human Food Safety and the Regulation of Animal Drugs.
2. Investigation of Civil Rights Enforcement by the Office for Civil Rights at the Department of Education.
3. Federal and State Roles in Economic Stabilization.
4. Opportunities for Self-Sufficiency for Women in Poverty.

This request has been cleared with the minority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PRAY FOR CAPTIVES IN BEIRUT

(Mr. DORNAN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues for their attention for just one brief moment.

From the launch pad at Kennedy to a small dungeon somewhere in Beirut, I ask for your thoughts for just 1 second. We are about to adjourn.

As many of you did at Thanksgiving time, over these holidays when you join with your families to pray, please remember our Americans and some fellow Europeans who are held in captivity in Beirut.

At this moment, Terry Waite, for all of us and for his Archbishop of Canterbury, is taking letters and some messages from this House back to the captors in Beirut. I ask all of you to join our Chaplain to pray for the success of Terry Waite so that our Americans in Beirut and the others know that we are thinking of them and praying for them during these blessed days and these happy holidays.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the RECORD reflect that on House Resolution 342, the resolution we have just previously voted on, I inadvertently missed the vote. I was here on the House floor explaining to some of the Members on the other side of the aisle what was in the conference report on reconciliation and missed the vote myself.

I was present and I intended to vote "aye" on House Resolution 342.

PERLE PLEDGES FULL U.S. COMPLIANCE WITH THE ABM TREATY

(Mr. FASCELL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, on December 10, 1985, the Subcommittees on Arms Control, International Security and Science, on Europe and the Middle East and on International Economic Policy and Trade, conducted an important hearing on "Technology Transfer and the SDI Research Agreements."

The purpose of the hearing was to examine the arms control implications of transferring SDI technology to our allies. Of particular note were the comments made by Richard Perle, Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Policy at the Defense Department, concerning the ABM Treaty.

Mr. Perle assured the subcommittees that "The United States is conducting the SDI Research Program in full compliance with the ABM Treaty * * * and that cooperative SDI research efforts undertaken with allied government institutions, industry and universities will be subject to continuing review for compliance with U.S. international obligations, including the ABM Treaty."

In response to a series of questions I asked of Mr. Perle during the hearing, he made it very clear that allied willingness to participate in SDI research was in no way indicative of allied commitment to deployment.

On this point, the ABM Treaty contains specific provisions relevant to the transfer of ABM technology to other states. Article 9 of the ABM Treaty states that "To assure the viability and effectiveness of this Treaty, each party undertakes not to transfer to other states, and not to deploy outside its national territory, ABM systems or their components limited by this Treaty." When asked how the United States was going to comply with this provision, Mr. Perle responded that "The provisions to which you refer, the noncircumvention provision, was negotiated in 1972 for a very specific purpose, and that is so that neither side could, by simply transferring to its allies capabilities that it was prohibited from having itself, circumvent the intent of that Treaty."

Agreed statement G clarifies this point further. It states that: "The parties understand that article IX of the treaty includes the obligation of the United States and the U.S.S.R. not to provide to other states technical descriptions or blueprints specifically worked out for the construction of ABM systems and their components limited by the treaty." In response to questioning on this point, Mr. Perle explained that this "phrase * * * is used in the context of a scenario in which one side—and I think the Soviets have the United States in mind and we had them in mind—might give to its allies the blueprints of technical data necessary to fabricate a prohibited system, and that we would not do."

According to the longstanding interpretation of the ABM Treaty, neither the United States nor the Soviet Union is permitted to develop, test, or deploy ABM systems or components of ABM systems prohibited by the ABM Treaty. Nor could such ABM systems or components of ABM systems legally be transferred to our allies. It therefore, remains to be clarified just what research will be conducted by our allies and how that complies with ABM Treaty requirements.

The subcommittees were reassured by Mr. Perle's comments and his reaffirmation of the ABM Treaty. However, despite this reaffirmation, several questions remain as to how in fact the administration will meet its requirements under the ABM Treaty in regard to technology transfer to our allies.

During his testimony, Mr. Perle did explain that the administration has "developed a set of guidelines and procedures to ensure that all exchanges of data and allied cooperative research efforts are in compliance with our obligations under the ABM Treaty." The committee looks forward to reviewing these guidelines which will help us to understand how the administration plans to meet its requirements under the ABM Treaty.

CONGRESSIONAL CREDIT UNION REDUCES CREDIT CARD RATES

(Mr. ANNUNZIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks there has been a great deal said about the high interest rates charged consumers on credit cards. The national average on credit card interest rates is nearly 19 percent, even though the prime rate is only 9.5 percent, and the discount rate, the rate the Federal Reserve charges banks for loans, is only 7.5 percent.

As a member of the Wright Patman Congressional Federal Credit Union, the credit union which serves Members and employees of the House of Representatives, I am proud to report that the credit union has cut the rate it charges on credit card balances to 14.80 percent. This is the second time in the last 2 months that the credit union has reduced its rate, and it now has one of the lowest rates in the country.

I should also point out, Mr. Speaker, that the credit union does not charge an annual fee for its credit card as do most other financial institutions.

The new credit card interest rate will take effect on January 15, and will apply to old as well as new credit card balances. The credit union was prepared to put the rate into effect immediately, but because of a heavy workload on the part of the credit union's card processor, the changes could not be made until after the end of the year.

Mr. Speaker, I applaud the actions of the Wright Patman Congressional Federal Credit Union, and I think that its willingness to keep rates down is a credit not only to the officers of the credit union, but to the entire House of Representatives.

CONTRACTING FOR OUTSIDE LEGAL SERVICES BY U.S. POSTAL SERVICE

(Mr. PARRIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, this year, the U.S. Postal Service is staring straight in the face of a $500 million deficit. Similar deficits have been seen in past years as well, in spite of nearly $1 billion in annual Federal subsidies; in spite of two postal rate hikes in 1981 worth more than $4 billion; in spite of an additional rate hike in February of this year worth $1.8 billion.

In the past 5 years, particularly, we have continuously heard from the post office that times are tough, that they need this or that rate increase, that they are doing everything in their power to make the Postal Service a smooth, efficient, and financially conservative business. They continue to stand by this contention while the costs of running the Postal Service are rising at a rate three times that being experienced in other areas of the public and private sectors.

Now, however, we learn that in the last 5 years the Postal Service has paid Washington attorney Joseph Califano $2,634,514.90 in legal fees, and over two-thirds of a million dollars in this year alone—all for outside legal advice. This, on the face of it, is very hard to understand in view of the fact that the Postal Service already has 113 full-time in-house attorneys who are specialists in the area of postal law.

I would suggest in these times of fiscal responsibility, deficits, and shrinking budgets, that the Board should review its policy of contracting for services such as this and see if it can't get by with somewhat less outside legal advice in the future.

GRAMM/RUDMAN

(Mr. BRYANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, as one who has worked since coming to Congress to bring our Federal budget into balance, I voted for passage of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act, or as we have come to refer to it, "Gramm-Rudman-Hollings." By passing this measure we have put the Federal Government on course for a balanced budget in 1991, have set specific deficit reduction targets for each year between now and then, and have provided for a system of automatic mandatory cuts to make up any shortfall in the efforts of Congress and the President to reach those targets.

This bill does not balance the budget; it sets out a mandatory schedule for balancing the budget by 1991. It is no substitute for political courage, nor is it a method of budgeting which the framers of our Constitution had envisioned would be followed. In fact it is regrettable that we have come to the point that only a mandatory system of forced automatic cuts can accomplish what the President and the Congress should have accomplished alone. But nothing else has worked. This bill will force Congress and the President to get our budget back in the black and on a pay as you go basis. And because the cuts begin this year, no one can take political credit for the plan who doesn't have the courage to use it.

The final version of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings improves on the original Senate version by requiring that the actual budget cutting begins this year. The Senate version supported by the sponsors of the bill, would have made no cuts at all in this year's budget—in fact it would have led to a deficit increase by $10 billion over current limits. That's not my idea of budget balancing.

These Senate sponsors said, "it was "unrealistic" to make cuts this year. That attitude is why our Government finances are in this fix to begin with. It's not hard to support the idea of a balanced budget to be achieved at some future time, the hard part is making the choices necessary to get there. Some would apparently prefer to campaign on their votes for a hypothetical balanced budget, and leave the actual decisions until after the election. I for one am glad we didn't let them get away with it. It is time to put up or shut up.

The final version of this measure also improves on the original Senate version by requiring the Pentagon to take part in the across-the-board automatic cuts. The original Senate version subjected only domestic programs to serious across-the-board cuts leaving the defense budget—which has doubled in the past 5 years and is riddled with waste—with only minor cuts. Under this new provision the entire Government, with the exception of social security, veterans pensions, and a few other areas, would share equally in the across-the-board automatic cuts.

Mr. Speaker, I supported Gramm-Rudman-Hollings even though I know that another means of balancing the budget would be better. But nothing else has worked. We cannot allow our budget to plunge further and further into the red simply because Congress and the President refuse to agree on our national priorities, or soon we will not be able to pay for anything. Viewed responsibly, I believe that the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings bill can be a major factor in getting the Congress and the President to start making some choices; otherwise the choices will be made for us.

I will be working to see that the right choices are made.

CONSIDERATION OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON BUDGET RECONCILIATION

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I think the record should show what finally happened on the last vote. As the House will remember, a number of us raised objections to the last rule because it would have an impact on some abortion language that we felt was in the bill, and also on the value-added tax.

As it turned out, in the course of the vote on the rule, there were agreements made by the majority leadership that those provisions would be stricken from the conference report before a rule is brought to the floor in the future, and it is my understanding that the Rules Committee is now meeting, that we will, in fact, have a rule, and we will have a process which will have neither the language on abortion nor the language with regard to a value-added tax come to the floor today.

For that reason, many who had said they were going to vote no on the rule ended up voting yes.

I still think it is a bad process to use, to strip the House of its rights using a rules procedure like that. But the fact is the vote turned around largely on the fact that certain guarantees were made about the rule that we will have up before us in the near future.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say I understand the gentleman's recitation of the facts to be accurate.

I also would say that the gentleman indicated the Rules Committee is now in session. I understand that is not true. They may not be until 4 or 4:30.

So I do not want any Members to think that somehow right away we are going to be dealing with this. It will be some passage of time, as I understand it.

ILL TRADE WINDS

(Mr. LEVIN of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, the Chrysler Corp. is going to idle about 3,000 workers, and this is part of an effort of the corporation and the workers to modernize the facilities.

But these efforts are not going to be very effective, or certainly not fully effective if unfair foreign competition is allowed to swamp American products.

It was announced a few days ago that the U.S. trade deficit will be $30.5 billion in the last quarter. This economy of ours is being blown by ill trade winds and a Presidential veto, like that of the textile bill, is not a trade policy.

The U.S. continues to slip in many basic industries, and it is time for this administration to get its act together on trade policy.

ANNOUNCMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will now entertain unanimous-consent requests for special orders, but we will come back to regular business later.

TRIBUTE TO JAMES F. DRING, ATTORNEY, JOINT COMMITTEE ON TAXATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute today to James F. Dring, deceased staff member of the Joint Committee on Taxation, of which I am chairman.

James Dring served with distinction as an attorney on the joint committee staff from September 1980, to his death on June 16, 1985, at age 63. As you know, the joint committee staff provides valuable technical assistance in the development of tax legislation.

James Dring was an academically and intellecutally able attorney. His areas of responsibility included some of the most difficult provisions of the Tax Code. He was an acknowledged expert on the taxation of corporate reorganizations and possessed a vast technical ability in the taxation of corporations, partnerships, consolidated returns, and most recently, commodity straddles and bond discount. During the pressure filled and sometimes difficult times during the development of tax legislation, Jim Dring's professionalism and patience was legend and earned him the respect of his colleagues and coworkers.

James Dring will be missed by members of the tax committee, congressional staff colleagues and associates from other committee staffs, as well as Treasury Department tax staff and others that Jim worked with during his years with the joint committee staff.

Before joining the joint committee staff, Jim Dring worked with the law firm of Cohen and Uretz from 1976 to 1980. Prior to that, he worked for the Chief Counsel's Office in the Internal Revenue Service as director of its Refund Litigation Division and later served as director of its Legislation and Regulations Division. Jim received his bachelor's degree from Providence College in 1946, his law degree from Catholic University in 1949, and a masters in law from Georgetown University in 1952. Jim Dring was also a Latin scholar and an avid runner.

Jim Dring was born on August 25, 1921, in Newport, R.I., and served 3 years in the U.S. Army during World War II.

Our sincere condolences and prayers go to his wife, Barbara, and his two children, James and Kathleen.

USE OF GOVERNMENT VEHICLES RESTRICTED

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, today the Committee on Government Operations reported the bill H.R. 3614, to restrict the use of Government vehicles for transportation of officers and employees of the Federal Government between their residences and places of employment, and for other purposes. I introduced that bill, with Congressmen HORTON, SAXTON, and DIOGUARDI as cosponsors on Thursday, October 24, 1985. Congressman CLINGER has since been added as a cosponsor.

Legislation is needed now because the use of Government vehicles for home-to-work transportation of Government officers and employees has greatly expanded outside the scope of the law since it was passed in 1946. A 1982 survey indicated that at least 176 employees were receiving home-to-work transportation at Government expense, most of them illegally. A more recent survey, conducted just this year found that at least 78 employees are still using Government vehicles for home-to-work transportation outside the scope of the law.

In 1983, upon learning of what appeared to be an inordinate number of State Department officials who were receiving transportation between their homes and work, I requested the Comptroller General of the United States to review legal memoranda prepared by that Department and by the Department of Defense and to advise me whether they were consistent with the law. On June 3, 1983, the Comptroller General issued a decision refuting the arguments used in these memoranda to justify such transportation, and clarifying earlier decisions of the Comptroller General concerning the law. According to the Comptroller General, these earlier decisions may have, in fact, contributed to agency confusion as to the meaning of the law. Further, the Comptroller General suggested that since the general law governing use of Government vehicles for home-to-work transportation had not been updated since it was passed in 1946, it probably should be amended to reflect current needs of the Government.

In clarifying previous Comptroller General decisions concerning the use of Government vehicles for home-to-work transportation, the Comptroller General stated that they "only authorize the exercise of administrative discretion to provide home-to-work transportation for Government officials and employees on a temporary basis when (1) there is a clear and present danger to Government employees or an emergency threatens the performance of vital Government functions, or (2) such transportation is incident to otherwise authorized use of the vehicles involved."

Following receipt of the Comptroller General's decision, I wrote to the Director of the Office of Management and Budget on June 6, 1983, enclosing a copy of that decision and indicating that the administration might want to survey the current needs of the Government, and if necessary, recommend an amendment to the law. The Director forwarded to me the administration's proposed amendment 2 years later—on August 31, 1985.

H.R. 3614 is a bipartisan bill. It complies with the administration request for legislation in this area, but it is somewhat more restrictive than the administration proposal. Moreover, this bill would correct the confusion that surrounds current law. It spells out specifically who is authorized home-to-work transportation and establishes appropriate procedures for emergency conditions.

H.R. 3614 would specifically authorize home-to-work transportation for the President and Vice President, those officials compensated pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 5312 at level I of the Executive Schedule—the heads of the executive departments and the U.S. Trade Representative—and their deputies, when appropriate; the deputy and under secretaries of Defense, the Secretaries of the Air Force, Army, and Navy, the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Commandant of the Coast Guard; the Directors of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Central Intelligence Agency; the heads of U.S. diplomatic missions abroad and the U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations; and officers or employees performing field work requiring such transportation. Further the President would be authorized to name up to 16 additional officers and employees of the Government as needed, and, if a clear and present danger, an emergency, or similarly compelling considerations made such transportation essential, the head of an agency would be authorized to determine the need for such use up to 15 calendar days, which would be renewed for 90 days, if the need persisted. Any discretionary use of Government vehicles for home-to-work transportation would have to be reported promptly to the Congress each time it is authorized.

H.R. 3614 reduces the number of Government employees who are currently, though often illegally, using Government vehicles for home-to-work transportation. Moreover, in an effort to be both fair and consistent, it eliminates authorization for some officers and employees who are now authorized by law to receive this transportation; and, it provides the necessary flexibility to meet unforeseen, but compelling, situations so that artificial and ill-conceived restrictions will not hamper the efficient and effective operations of the Government.

This bill is needed to provide clear guidance to the agencies to eliminate misunderstandings and confusion under which some of them are currently operating, which has led to a proliferation in the number of Government employees receiving home-to-work transportation at Government expense.

I urge all Members to support this legislation.

TRADE, INVESTMENT, AND ECONOMIC JUSTICE FOR ALL WORKERS

Mr. SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, predictably, the scope of the current trade policy debate in Washington asks us to throw in with either the "free traders" or the "protectionists." We seemingly must choose between rejoicing as bargain-hunting consumers unleashed in a global department store or take to the barricades in defense of American jobs out of fear for our own.

But there is another dimension to the current dilemma. First, we need to understand how our country's competitive position has changed in relation to those of other trading nations. Then, we should move beyond abstract discussions about free trade and critically ask who is benefiting materially from our our rapid integration into the global economy and to what degree? Finally, we need to recall our heritage and work for specific changes in the international trading system that will promote economic justice abroad and at home, while helping to restore U.S. competitiveness in the world marketplace.

From 1945 to 1965, the American economy was largely self-reliant. Most Americans saw their standards of living go up as part of the general prosperity. American industries and manufacturing workers—producing primarily for the domestic marketplace—were not threatened by imports. Free trade was a high-sounding principle of academic interest, irrelevant to the day-to-day concerns of most Americans.

In the last 20 years, the American position in the global economy has changed dramatically. U.S. exports have not kept pace with the flood of imports pouring into the American marketplace. By 1980, 70 percent of all the goods produced in the United States were competing with foreign-made goods. America has gone from being acknowledged economic superpower in the world to being one of a pack of economic powerhouses engaged in very hard-nosed global competition to retain old markets and to open new ones.

We were not prepared for the onslaught of foreign goods given easy access to American markets in recent years by the administration's doctrinaire adherence to free trade principles. All across America, scores of communities, hundreds of plants, and millions of workers have been ravaged. Coming to terms with the new dynamics of international trade is proving to be very painful and costly for thousands of Americans who have lost their jobs to imports and have been denied means to retrain themselves for new jobs. Not only has the United States lost its economic preeminence, but it is apparent that many American consumers now prefer foreign-made products.

What those Americans who are hurt by what now passes as free trade often don't realize is that 20 percent of all U.S. goods now produced are exported. Growth in the American economy, as never before, depends upon further increases in exports made possible by open access to foreign markets.

At the same time, what currently passes as free trade among nations does not redound equally to everyone's benefit. Multinational corporations get the most from the development of "the global factory," as the capacity to market finished products from parts manufactured in several different countries is often called. Advances in transportation, communications, and information systems have greatly enhanced the ability of these corporate giants to take advantage of international wage, productivity, and unit labor cost differentials. As capital and technology move around the world with little regard for national boundaries, workers will continue to remain stationary and bound by national laws. This economic fact of life allows American-based multinational corporations to transfer production from the United States to countries lacking basic labor rights. The workings of global production in the 1980's undercut the rights of all workers. They contribute to lowering the conditions of American workers in the direction of the lowest common international denominator.

Put another way: Is it possible for American workers to compete with South Koreans working under the thumb of an authoritarian regime and receiving 10 percent of United States manufacturing wages? More importantly, is it right?

We have entered a new era in which America ought to use its far-reaching economic leverage to insist upon changes in the International trading system, for example, that will spread the benefits of free trade within nations as well as among them. Many U.S. industries and unions rightly protest unfair traded subsidies and the "dumping" of low-priced foreign goods on our shores. The same outcry would be heard and acted upon in protest of "social dumping"—unfair competition from corporations which pay low wages to foreign workers denied the free exercise of basic labor rights.

The rights of American workers will be more secure and U.S. competitiveness will be improved by a forward-looking, aggressive, coordinated strategy to extend basic labor rights, such as freedom of association, to workers in all countries. The threat by American-based multinational corporations to transfer domestic production and jobs to foreign countries in which there are no labor rights becomes an ever more common ploy to force American workers to relinquish legitimate rights and material benefits won through more than 200 years of personal hardship and struggle.

A first important step that Congress took in 1984 was to grant certain trade preferences only to countries that respect internationally recognized labor rights. This year a second important step is about to be taken with the passage in this House last week of the OPIC Amendments of 1985 which prohibit the overseas private investment corporation from asking American taxpayers to underwrite the investments of American-based multinational corporations in any foreign country that does not respect basic labor rights. Still, too many trade policymakers do not understand that while our Government turns a deaf ear to the exploitation of foreign workers, it does so at the expense of a growing number of American jobs and declining standards of living for many American workers.

One hundred years ago, the Knights of Labor spoke out for American workers in the belief that "an injury to one is of concern to all." In the era of the global factory, we should reaffirm this belief and act upon it for all working people.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FEIGHAN].

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, new provisions in the 1984 trade law that link participation in the Generalized System of Preferences to protection for the rights of workers are of enormous importance. After a century of struggle to win basic rights in the workplace, American workers and communities today are increasingly subject to corporate threats to transfer production to places without strong labor unions or regulation of the work environment. Millions of jobs have been moved to countries where labor is cheaper, unions are weaker, and regulation is nonexistent. Highly mobile transnational corporations no longer are rooted in or responsible to individual communities or nations.

By the same token, workers in Third World countries which are anxious to attract foreign investment are being deprived of the most basic elements of human dignity, as the price of development. The rapid growth of export-oriented industrialization has been accompanied by an increased level of authoritarianism and suppression of human rights among some of the countries which are the most successful exporters, and the chief beneficiaries of the Generalized System of Preferences.

In short, American workers have been pitted against workers from Third World countries, and both have lost.

It is significant, therefore, that the U.S. Congress has recognized in the new trade law that there are basic international standards for protecting the rights of workers and has taken steps to strengthen respect for those standards by incorporating compliance with them as a condition for participation in the Generalized System of Preferences. While many ambiguities remain in the law, the significance of the principle that has been introduced ought not be overlooked: That protection for the American worker is inextricably linked to protection for all workers.

South Korea, which, in 1984, was the second largest beneficiary of the GSP Program, has prospered by its export-oriented development plan, and has already joined the ranks of the newly industrialized countries [NIC's]. Between 1962 and 1981, the economy grew in real terms at an average rate of 10 percent a year, one of the highest growth rates in the world. The number of mining and manufacturing jobs has risen dramatically. Since the instigation of the United States GSP Program, Korean gross national product per capita has more than tripled, jumping from $591 to $1,998 in 1984.

South Korea is also one of the top beneficiaries of the GSP Program, having exported $1.5 billion to the United States under the program in 1984, 13.5 percent of the world total. Such extraordinary economic success should contribute to the continued trend toward more open democracy in Korea, including an expansion of workers' rights.

Unfortunately, South Korean workers have experienced a steady deterioration in protection of their rights, almost in inverse production to the growth in the country's prosperity. Far from "taking steps to afford workers the internationally recognized rights of workers," as our trade law provides, the South Korean Government has, since 1971, been taking steps to limit rights of workers and curtail those rights earlier won.

Under an emergency decree promulgated by former President Park Chung Hee in 1971, collective bargaining was effectively suspended, while industrial actions such as strikes and demonstrations were prohibited. In 1981, this decree was lifted, but replaced by a new and equally restrictive labor law. In 1980, all labor unions were purged, many were dissolved, and the remainder reorganized under much more restrictive laws. What had been a growing Federation of Korean Trade Unions lost one-third of its members subsequent to these new laws.

Mr. Speaker, we were all encouraged to see some positive steps toward a more open society taken in Korea, particularly earlier this year. I regret that that trend appears to have changed. The restriction of labor unions, and the denial of essential workers' rights are but one aspect of a human rights record in South Korea that is troubling in the extreme.

Testimony presented to the United States Trade Representative's Office earlier this year by a coalition of groups working for greater human rights in Korea makes a compelling argument for suspending Korea's participation in the Generalized System of Preferences until the Korean Government restores the internationally recognized rights of workers in both law and practice. I ask that this testimony be included as a part of my statement at this point.

I would like to close by commending the initiative of my friend and colleague from Ohio, Mr. PEASE, for scheduling this special order, and especially for his earnest and vigilant leadership on the issue of workers' rights both in the United States and abroad.

LABOR RIGHTS VIOLATIONS IN THE REPUBLIC OF KOREA

(Submitted by the North American Coalition for Human Rights in Korea, the Department of Social and Economic Justice, Board of Church and Society, United Methodist Church, the Korea Support Committee, San Francisco, CA)

"Internationally recognized rights of workers" has been defined in Section 502(a) of the 1984 Trade Law to include:

1. the right to association;
2. the right to organize and bargain collectively;
3. a prohibition on the use of any form of forced or compulsory labor;
4. a minimum age for the employment of children; and
5. acceptable conditions of work with respect to minimum wages, hours of work and occupational safety and health.

For the purpose of this testimony, South Korean law and government practice will be examined in connection with each of these rights as defined by United Nations International Labor Organization (ILO) conventions.

Applying these international labor standards to South Korea is admittedly problematic, since it is not a member of the ILO and has therefore not ratified any of the ILO Conventions nor been the subject of any ILO investigation. However, for more than a decade South Korea has sought admittance into the ILO, and has been prevented from membership only by the political actions of allies of North Korea. It would seem fair therefore to judge South Korea's labor practices against the most commonly and broadly ratified standards of the organization it has sought to join, namely Conventions 87 on freedom of association and 98 on the right to organize and bargain collectively. Other conventions relating to forced labor, child labor, minimum wage-setting mechanisms and worker health and safety regulations may also be useful, if less authoritative as guides.

The fact that many countries at lower levels of development than South Korea have ratified these basic conventions of the ILO lends weight to the argument that they are genuinely international standards.

The forms of government infringement against labor rights in the Republic of Korea include: (1) laws which are not in keeping with ILO standards, that restrict freedom of association, organization or collective action; (2) failure to enforce laws which protect workers or provide for grievance procedures; and (3) interference in labor-management relations or labor union affairs by intelligence or police agents. These violations are outlined below according to each of the five categories of labor rights specified in the amended GSP legislation.

1. THE RIGHT OF ASSOCIATION

The ILO Convention on the Right of Association (No. 87) is clear and unequivocal:

Workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, shall have the right to establish and, subject only to the rules of the organization concerned, to join organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization.

The 1980 Korean Constitution is not quite so clear. Article 31 states:

"To enhance working conditions, workers shall have the right to independent association, collective bargaining and collective action. However, the right to collective action shall be exercised in accordance with the provisions of law. . . . The right to collective action of workers employed by the central government, local governments, state-run enterprises, defense industries, public utilities or enterprises which have a serious impact on the national economy may be either restricted or denied in accordance with the provisions of law."

Article 35 adds that "the freedoms and rights of citizens may be restricted by law only when necessary for national security, the maintenance of public order or public welfare."

The "Provisions of Law" relating to the right of association refer primarily to the Labor Union Law, which was amended on December 31, 1980 in ways that considerably hamper the ability of workers to organize freely. The following restrictions of the right of association are presently incorporated in the amended labor statutes:

A. Labor unions can only be formed in individual workplaces where 30 or more workers, at least 20% of the work force, sign a petition which is submitted to the government for approval. This means that workers in all companies with less than 30 employees, approximately 80% of Korea's businesses, are excluded from union membership altogether.

It also means that because unions cannot now be formed beyond the level of a single company, some of Korea's most effective labor unions were forced to dissolve in 1981, on the grounds that multi-company unions were illegal. In January that year, the City of Seoul declared that the Chonggye Garment Workers Union was illegal and must disband. The Chonggye Garment Workers' Union had since 1971 represented the workers in one of Korea's most exploited industries, in downtown Seoul's crowded garment district where hundreds of tiny shops with from 5 to 10 workers, mostly underage girls, eked out an existence meager for owner and worker alike, under conditions of rampant tuberculosis and other occupational diseases. During the 1970s, with aid from the Asian-American Free Labor Institute (AAFLI) of AFL-CIO, the Chonggye workers had built a labor school on the rooftop of the factory building where the girls studied, operated a consumer cooperative and carried on union business. Incidence of tuberculosis declined and by the mid-70s, the union had succeeded in negotiating district-wide wage contracts and agreements that lowered working hours from 14 to 10 hours per day and established the right to one day off each week.

All this progress was reversed in 1981, when the city revoked the legal status of the Chonggye Union and closed the labor school. For the workers in Seoul's garment district, there was no more "right of association."

B. Another restriction on the right of association is the provision in the Labor Union Law forbidding political activities by unions. The amended law prohibits unions from any act in relation to election to any public office, in support of a specific political party or candidate, or in collecting or disbursing funds for political use. Employers are under no such restriction.

C. The right of association is further hampered by Article 12-2 of the labor union law which prohibits "intervention by a third party":

No person except for employees who have a direct employment relationship with the employer, the labor union concerned, or other persons duly authorized by laws or regulations shall manipulate, instigate, obstruct or intervene with the intent to influence the concerned parties in the establishment of dissolution of a labor union, joining or leaving a labor union, or in collective bargaining with the employer." (newly inserted on December 31, 1980.)

While this provision was reportedly written to prevent religious organizations such as the Young Catholic Workers or the Protestant Urban Industrial Mission from exercising any influence on workers, it also prevents national, provincial and city labor union officials from any involvement with local union organization.

Early in 1985 the South Korean government announced that it had approved certain changes in the implementation decrees of the Labor Union Law. These alterations include easing the ban on third-party intervention in the affairs of local unions (although the ban on third-party assistance to unorganized workers trying to organize a union remains in effect); allowing miners, deep-sea fishermen, and taxi drivers to form multi-enterprise unions; and easing the requirement that a percentage of union dues be used for welfare activities.

As AAFLI News noted, however, "despite these moderate reforms, the fact remains that unions are still prohibited from organizing unorganized workers."

D. In addition to provisions of the law, procedural difficulties serve to hamper greatly the right of association. For a union to be recognized, applications containing the names and addresses of thirty charter members must be submitted to the appropriate labor committee, which has absolute authority to act or delay indefinitely. In case after case, when workers have attempted to organize unions and filed their papers, company managers have either fired the workers prior to the recognition of the union or have organized a separate union which gained government recognition while the application of the workers languished on a bureaucrat's desk.

Once an application with signatures and by-laws attached is submitted, the law states with great ambiguity:

"If the by-laws of any labor union conflict with laws or regulations, or it is likely to become detrimental to the public interest, the administrative authority may, upon a resolution of the labor committee, order the cancellation of, or change to the by-laws." (Art. 16) Likewise, under identical conditions, "it may . . . order the dissolution of the labor union or order reelection of its officers." (Art. 32.)

During the summer of 1980, the martial law government of Gen. Chun Doo Hwan decimated the labor movement under the guise of "purification." The August 20, 1980 "martial law order for purification of labor unions and promotion of labor union purification movement and other supplementary measures" (Doc. 1354-21208) forced the resignation of 11 of the 17 national industrial union presidents, 106 province and regional labor union officers and 191 local union officers. All national, provincial and city level labor councils were closed down, the industrial unions downgraded to "associations."

Any union officers who refused to resign on August 20 were sent to Army purification camps where they were subjected to brutal punishment for periods of from several weeks to several months. Most were then blacklisted by the ROK Government to prevent their re-employment in other firms. It is estimated by human rights organizations in Korea that as many as 1,000 former labor union officers and activists remain blacklisted today, five years later.

When the amended labor union law was put into effect on December 31, 1980, the following provision was included: "all dissolved labor unions and dismissed or expelled union officers from the date of August 20, 1980, until the present shall be considered to have been dissolved or subject to reelection orders in terms of article 32 of this law." (Addenda, Law No. 3350, Dec. 31, 1980) This ex post facto provision made it impossible for any dismissed worker or union official to appeal the actions of the martial law command. Other provisions in the labor union law barred these same workers from union office for a period of three years.

One immediate effect of these purges and changes in the law was a drastic and rapid decrease in the membership of the Federation of Korean Trade Unions. From a peak of 1,194,000 members in 1979, the FKTU declined to 834,000 in 1981 and continued to decline at slower rates until 1984.

2. THE RIGHT TO BARGAIN COLLECTIVELY

Two aspects of ILO Convention No. 98 are matters of particularly grave abuse in the Republic of Korea. Article 1 declares that:

"Workers shall enjoy adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination . . . more particularly in respect of acts calculated to (a) make the employment of a worker subject to the condition that he shall not join a union or shall relinquish trade union membership; (b) cause the dismissal of or otherwise prejudice a worker by reason of union membership or because of participation in union activities outside working hours or, with the consent of the employer, within working hours."

Article 2 states:

"Workers' and employers' organizations shall enjoy adequate protection against any acts of interference by each other or each other's agents or members in their establishment, functioning or administration. . . . In particular, acts which are designed to promote the establishment of workers' organizations, . . . shall be deemed to constitute acts of interference within the meaning of this article."

Changes in the labor law in 1980, coupled with direct police intervention in labor affairs at the factory level, have destroyed the autonomy of labor unions in their bargaining with management. The transformation from industrial unionism to so-called "enterprise unionism", carried out by the legal reforms that isolated each company union from other unions or from "third parties", has been well characterized by the Far Eastern Economic Review:

"Although the new system theoretically allows more autonomy and democracy at the bottom, it has fragmented the whole union movement. 'The whole idea (of changing the system) is to break down the FKTU into many small, independent units so that it cannot function as a pressure group,' one activist claimed." (July 19, 1984.)

At the company level a full panoply of pressures is exerted to co-opt labor leadership where possible, and where that fails, to get rid of it. Cases of sexual harassment or physical abuse of female labor leaders by company officials or hired thugs are almost too numerous to mention, but some of the most memorable incidents involve the Dong-Il Textile Co (1978), the YH Wig Co. (1979) The Haitai Confectionery Co. (1978, 1983, 1985), The Control Data Co. (1982), Iu Bookbinding Co. (1984) Daewoo Apparel (1984), Korea Light Electric Co. (1985) Wuonpoong Textile Co. (1982), the Chonggye Garment Workers Union (1972-85) Hyup Jin Electronics (1984-5). (See Appendix II for summaries of these incidents.)

In South Korea, however, the threat to labor union autonomy comes not as much from management as from the direct intervention at the company level by police and intelligence officials, in the name of national security and political stability. "Many different levels of intervention can be considered," according to Ronald Rodgers of the University of Wisconsin. "Presently within the powerful Agency for National Security Planning [formerly the KCIA] there is a Committee to Counteract Labor Insurgency with agents throughtout the country. Local governmental units are also anxious to avoid labor disturbances in their districts, and so the police often play a role in monitoring union activities and union organizing. One practical effect that most union members are careful to choose as leaders only those persons who are acceptable to the government. Another effect is that, according to informed observers police and security agents play a greater role in the resolution of labor disputes than the official labor authorities do. However, the primary objective of the security agents is to suppress anything that would contribute to political instability, and not to simply facilitate the most appropriate resolution of the dispute. That was demonstrated in the much publicized Control Data (Korea) Corporation and Wuonpoong Textiles disputes, where security agents prohibited resolutions that would have included the reinstatement of dismissed union activists." ("Labor Relations Law and Labor Control in the Republic of Korea", 1983, p. 19)

While the right to take collective action is not specifically listed among the "internationally recognized rights of workers" in the GSP law, it is presumed by the ILO Freedom of Association Committee to be an extension of the rights to associate and to organize. The Committee's findings consistently cite limitations on the right to strike as violations of Convention No. 87.

The right to strike was prohibited by special security law from 1971 to 1981, when this law was replaced by amendments to the Labor Dispute Adjustment Law. The operative terms of this statute restrict "acts of dispute';" (defined as acts "including strikes, sabotage, lockouts, and other disruptive tactics through which the parties to labor relations intend to accomplish their aims, and the acts against such tactics, both of which hamper the normal operation of a business.") to "the pertinent workplace," following a majority vote of the members of the union and a thirty-day "cooling-off period." As in labor organizing and collective bargaining, no "third party" may intervene with intent to influence the dispute. Acts of dispute are prohibited for employees engaged in the State, local governments, the state-or-local government-run corporations, and defense industries.

Since the limit of location for a dispute was written into the law, all disputes have taken the form of sit-in strikes in which employees take over the factory or company facilities, rather than pickets or other more traditional forms of peaceful protest. This is reportedly due to the fact that the law has been interpreted as outlawing acts of dispute outside the factory, even at its gate. It is also, and perhaps more directly, due to the immediate use of riot police to break up any outdoor labor protest.

The most recent instance of the overriding of labor and management by police action was the Daewoo Motor Company strike in April, 1985, at the company's automobile plant in Pupyong, near Inchon. For more than a week, several hundred of the company's 3,000 workers occupied the factory, while some 8,000 police surrounded the plant preventing any food from reaching them. Only the workers' threats to set fire to the company computer delayed a police raid long enough to negotiate a compromise settlement with the company officials. When a contract had been signed, however, the police intervened to arrest the leaders of the strike. Seven workers now face criminal charges for leading the labor action.

3. PROHIBITION OF FORCED OR COMPULSORY LABOR

ILO Convention No. 29 concerning Forced or Compulsory Labor, ratified by 128 countries, defines "forced or compulsory labor" as "all work or service which is exacted from any person under the menace of any penalty and for which the said person has not offered himself volunarily."

Workers in South Korea, according to ILO statitstics, worked an average of 54.4 hours per week in 1984, the world's longest work week. This record which has been maintained for some years and has actually grown longer, has been pointed to with pride by Korean managers as evidence of the zeal of the Korean worker. However, with the advent of somewhat bolder labor unions (mostly unrecognized) this year, one of the most frequent demands is shorter work weeks. One of the forms of labor strike this spring was refusal by workers at the Chinro distillery of Inchon to work overtime. These stirring of protest suggest that Korean workers may in fact be victims of forced compulsory labor on a fairly broad scale. The evidence, to be sure, is sketchy, but the issue bears study at the least.

Apart from this, forced labor does not appear as a major problem in Korea today.

4. MINIMUM AGE FOR THE EMPLOYMENT OF CHILDREN

South Korea's laws protecting children from labor exploitation are consistent with ILO guidelines. Until recently, however, those laws were widely violated, particularly in the garment and textile industry. Such violations, to judge from the literature from the human rights movement and from the trade unions, appear to have greatly lessened in recent years.

5. ACCEPTABLE CONDITIONS OF WORK WITH RESPECT TO MINIMUM WAGES, HOURS OF WORK AND OCCUPATIONAL SAFETY AND HEALTH

ILO Conventions 26, 99 and 131 require states to establish and maintain machinery for fixing minimum wage rates, but considerable latitude is given to each state to determine that machinery, with only the proviso that "workers' and employers' organizations are to be consulted before wage-fixing machinery is established." (26, art.3(2))

The Republic of Korea has no law governing minimum wages, although the government has been proclaiming its intent to establish such a law soon for the past ten years. An informal guideline, based on estimated cost of living for single persons or for families, however, has been published for a number of years, with an infrequent government campaign to persuade companies to come closer to the line. For example, in 1980, it was estimated that a family of five required 270,000 won per month to live in Seoul. A survey in 1985 showed that the cost to have risen to 450,000 ($523). In 1980 69% of workers earned less than 100,000 won per month. The equivalent percentage of workers significantly under the poverty line in 1985 is not available, but aggregate statistics on wage increases suggest that the situation has not improved. Whereas real wages increased from an index of 100.0 in 1975 to 194.7 in 1983, labor productivity increased during that same period from 100.0 to 235.1 and consumer prices rose from 100.0 to 297.0 (Source: Bank of Korea, Economic Statistics Yearbook, cited by Moo Ki Bai, "Economic Growth, Export Expansion, and Wages and Labor Conditions in Korea," Seoul National University, January 1985.)

In one labor conflict after another this year, workers are protesting daily wages of 2,100 to 3,400 won. (2,100 won = $2.44) At this rate, a family would have to have eight breadwinners to reach the poverty line!

It can be inferred from these references that South Korea is badly in need for a minimum wage. Instead, the government publishes maximum wage increase guidelines each year that are enforced by the withholding of credit to companies that increase wages too much.

South Korea does have legislation setting industrial safety standards, but without any enforcement mechanism. As a result, the industrial death and accident rates in Korea are among the world's highest. During the period of 1980 to 1983, for example, the ROK suffered a 0.358% industrial death rate. This compared to 0.172 in the Philippines and ranked significantly higher than any other Asian country except Malaysia (Sarawak).

These statistics point to the need for internal freedoms for Korean workers to organize to protect themselves through collective bargaining, political action and if necessary collective actions. They should be understood as barometer of the need for adequate labor relations and protection, rather than as rights that can be guaranteed in the absence of other organizational rights.

PROPOSED REMEDIES

The pattern of abuse of labor rights in the Republic of Korea is sufficiently intense, broadly experienced and rooted in unjust law and government practice to require remedies, which are in fact available to the Korean government. It is not an exaggerate to state that South Korea, by the exploitative labor control through which it maintains cheap export prices, is subsidizing exports unfairly. This practice should not be rewarded by tariff-free access to U.S. markets through the GSP program.

We firmly believe that the Republic of Korea should be suspended from the GSP program until such time as it has restored by law and government practice the basic rights of its workers to organize freely, to bargain collectively and to be free from forced labor, sub-minimum wages and dangerous and unhealthy working conditions. Compliance with these standards should be monitored closely, so that whenever these conditions improve sufficiently, the Republic of Korea can be readmitted to beneficiary status, within the financial and competitive need guidelines established elsewhere in the law.

As an agency without economic interest in Korea, but with a deep and abiding concern for the protection of basic rights for the Korean people, we will be happy to assist the Trade Representative's office in any way possible to monitor Korea's progress.

□ 1530

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much for his contribution and for his generous remarks.

Mr. Speaker, last summer a representative of the AFL-CIO made a precedent-setting appearance before the U.S. Trade Representative to request that several countries be denied duty-free access to the American marketplace because the governments of those countries have well-documented records of denying basic labor rights. I want to read excerpts from that testimony by the AFL-CIO to underscore the extent to which many countries to which we extend special trade preferences and other assistance exploit their workers in order to gain a competitive advantage in world commerce. After listening to this information, I hope more of my colleagues will agree that the United Trade Representative ought to make this a major focus of negotiations with these countries in seeking to level the playing field for America to compete in international trade.

The AFL-CIO welcomes the opportunity to testify before the U.S. Trade Representative at these public hearings concerning the recently renewed and amended Generalized System of Preferences. As you know, the Federation is critical of certain aspects of the renewed GSP. We also have testified in the past against the inclusion of countries such as the Republic of Korea, Taiwan and Hong Kong in the list of GSP Beneficiary Countries, primarily on the grounds that their economies were well developed and did not need such support.

Yet, despite our opposition to certain provisions in the GSP, we have welcomed the inclusion of labor rights provisions in Title 5 of the Trade and Tariff Act of 1984 and are particularly gratified that the observance of labor rights and standards outlined in the legislation is now strictly required for a country to be designated by the President as a beneficiary developing country.

Today the AFL-CIO is requesting that GSP beneficiary status be removed from a series of countries whose violation of labor rights are outlined in our full submission, pursuant to Section 502(b), which according to the Federal Register of 14 February 1985 allows for making such a request "at any time."

The amended law states that in extending preferences the President shall not designate any country a beneficiary developing country "if such country has not or is not taking steps to afford internationally recognized workers rights to workers in that country (including designated zones in that country)." The law, moreover, defines such rights in the following way: "For purposes of this title the term 'internationally recognized worker rights' includes: (a) the right of association; (b) the right to organize and bargin collectively; (c) a prohibition on the use of any form of forced or compulsory labor; (d) a minimum age for the employment of children; and (e) acceptable conditions of work with respect to minimum wages, hours of work and occupational safety and health."

In a letter to Ambassador Brock on February 12, 1985, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland urged that: "In order for the concept of 'internationally recognized workers rights' to be applied in a meaningful fashion, . . ." regulations now being developed by the USTR should "specifically reference appropriate International Labor Organization Conventions as a means of defining these most important criteria."

The AFL-CIO regards the inclusion in a trade act of such internationally recognized rights as freedom of association, the right to organize and bargain collectively, and the prohibition on forced and compulsory labor, as a potentially powerful instrument for the promotion of human rights.

The AFL-CIO believes that the fundamental rights of freedom of association, protection from forced labor and the guarantee of the right to organize and bargain collectively are universal and indivisible. We believe, consistent with the interpretations of the International Labor Organization, that such basic rights are not contingent upon the level of development or social system in particular countries.

The AFL-CIO disagrees with the view that fundamental human rights, associated with the democratic form of government, are somehow dependent upon the level of development of a particular society. We specifically reject the notion recently proposed by the Soviet bloc at the ILO that: "supervision of the application of international labor standards must be carried out in such a way that account is taken of the level of development and the social and economic realities of the member states."

We agree with the recent assertion of the U.S. Department of State that: "A fallacy about the democratic form of government is that it can only take hold in wealthy societies. Yet when Switzerland and the United States established democratic governments, both were poor agrarian countries. Today, while many democracies are advanced industrial states, some are not. That democracy issues from great wealth would surprise Indians or Barbadians or Botswanans! By freeing untapped social energies and providing opportunities for their exercise, democracy often facilitates the creation of wealth. Nothing indicates, however, that a wealthy society is an absolute precondition for the establishment of democracy."

This statement applies equally to basic worker rights. And it is about the violation of these fundamental worker rights that we are here to testify, today.

The AFL-CIO also welcomes the inclusion in the GSP of standards concerning workplace safety and health, minimum age for the employment of children, minimum wages, and hours of work. We regard these standards as being of paramount importance in providing basic protection to workers from exploitation. But we recognize that some of these important standards can be judged in accordance with the level of development of particular countries, and that such standards can be said to be relative.

We will be presenting a list of countries which are among the world's greatest offenders of the fundamental worker rights of freedom of association, including the right to strike or withhold labor; the right to organize and bargain collectively through free and independent worker associations; and the right to protection from forced or compulsory labor. We seek to use this forum to draw attention to some of the most blatant offenders of worker rights and to test the strength of the new GSP legislation which mandates the exclusion of countries from the list of GSP beneficiaries for such violations.

We know that there are real teeth in the new GSP trade union rights provisions. We very much hope that the President and your office will apply them forcefully. While there are a number of other GSP beneficiary states which violate worker rights, we are here to urge the USTR and the President to strike from the list of GSP countries the following states, which in recent years have been among the worst and most flagrant violators of fundamental principles of worker rights: Chile, Guatemala, Haiti, Republic of Korea, Nicaragua, Paraguay, the Philippines (case material to follow shortly), Romania, and Suriname. In the words of the law, these countries have not or are not "taking steps to afford internationally recognized workers rights . . ."

Indeed, these countries—from different continents and possessing different social, economic and political systems—are guilty of many or all of the following violations: a. the suppression of independent unions; b. legal restrictions on the freedom of association and collective bargaining; c. punishment of striking workers; d. denial of the right to strike; e. intimidation, arrest or the murder of union activists; f. the use of forced or compulsory labor; g. the torture and beating of imprisoned trade unionists.

On the basis of: 1) reports from our own extensive network of AFL-CIO international affairs specialists; 2) first-hand field reports by staffs of various AFL-CIO international institutes; 3) reports from the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions; 4) the investigations of the International Labor Organization; 5) reports in the news media; 6) studies by reputable human rights organizations; 7) the testimony of exiled trade unionists; 8) eyewitness testimony of victims of repression; and 9) our own government's State Department and Labor Department reports, we are submitting detailed, country-by-country case histories along with this testimony.

These case histories clearly indicate that Chile, Guatemala, Haiti, the Republic of Korea, Nicaragua, Paraguay, the Philippines, Romania, and Suriname are massive violators of the worker rights included in Title 5 of the Trade and Tariff Act of 1984 and as such by law should be denied the designation of GSP Beneficiaries.

Our nation's commitment to help spur the economic growth of less developed and underdeveloped countries has been strongly supported by the AFL-CIO. Indeed, in the long term, political freedom and such fundamental rights as freedom of association and the right to organize and bargain collectively, are a necessary prerequisite for economic development.

The existence of free and independent organizations of working men and women seeking improved wages and working conditions and participating in the political process creates the basis for a stable workforce and a solid middle class of consumers as well as an internal democratic base. Such a stable workforce helps produce the internal demand necessary for economic growth and self-sufficiency.

Thus the inclusion of worker rights provisions in legislation which seeks to promote economic development in less developed countries is particularly appropriate.

We attach great importance to this review of the eligibility of GSP Beneficiary countries and expect to continue to provide information concerning individual countries and products, throughout the process.

The law is explicit in its requirement that GSP Beneficiary Countries respect fundamental worker rights. We therefore call on the President and the U.S. Trade Representative to live up to the spirit and letter of Title 5 of the Trade and Tariff Act of 1984 and to send a message to the tyrants and dictators, authoritarians and totalitarians of this world; that the U.S. government and the American people will not subsidize the violation of the fundamental rights of working people.

We are well aware that there are other GSP beneficiaries that violate worker rights and we reserve the right to challenge their status as GSP beneficiaries pursuant to the mandatory provisions in Section 502 (b) of the law.

CHILE

Eleven years of Pinochet's dictatorship have seen the severe deterioration of trade union freedoms. His regime has used every means available to beat down the worker. The ICFTU report Trade Union Rights: Survey of Violation 1983-84, shows how labor legislation has been structured to weaken workers' rights.

"The Chilean labor legislation of 1979 was introduced with the clear aim of fragmenting and weakening the trade union movement and several of its provisions are contrary to the ILO standards on freedom of association and trade union rights. The ILO Committee on Freedom of Association noted in particular, the following infringements.

a) the requirement of too high a minimum of workers for setting up a trade union;

b) extensive powers without legal remedies for the Labour Inspectorate to deny a legal personality to a union;

c) restrictive rules concerning the number of trade union officers, the requirements for eligibility and electoral procedures;

d) excessive powers for the authorities to inspect trade union finances and to investigate internal trade union affairs at any time;

e) prohibition of trade union's participation in political activities;

f) exclusion of civil servants from the right to organize in trade unions;

g) restrictions on the establishment of federations and confederations of trade unions, these federations and confederations being forbidden to participate in collective bargaining, to sign collective agreements or call a strike;

h) prohibition of collective bargaining in state administrations, in companies or institutions whose budgets have been financed in the course of the past two years by the state to an extent exceeding 50% and in certain public utility services managed by private companies;

i) important restrictions on the right to strike in respect of the requirements for deciding to hold a strike, the duration of a strike, the exclusion of several enterprises and the power of the authorities to decree the resumption of work."

There are scores of examples of State interference in the unions, raids on their offices, harassments, arrests, torture, internal banishment, exile, and assasinations. One victim of this heinous system was Tucapel Jimenez, President of the National Federation of Government Employees and a true supporter of democracy. Days after calling for trade union unity he was murdered and left lying along the roadside next to the taxi he drove to supplement his living. His throat was cut to near decapitation and he was shot twice in the head. To date, there has been no progress by the government to locate and prosecute his murderers.

More recently, trade unionist Manuel Gerrero, President of the Metropolitan Council of Chile's National Association of Teachers, was kidnapped and found murdered in the same manner and close to the spot where Tucapel Jimenez was found. On March 28, 1985, eight armed men in civilian clothing burst into Chile's National Association of Teachers' headquarters and proceeded to destroy files and equipment and beat some of the teachers who were present. Five persons were taken who were later released. The next day, March 29, Manuel Guerrero and two other persons were abducted and the bodies with their throats cut were found on March 30.

For years, the AFL-CIO has called for the U.S. Government to withdraw support from Pinochet to put more pressure on him to recognize the trade union and human rights of the Chilean people.

GUATEMALA

Guatemala is flagrantly violating ILO Convention 87 concerning the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize. Government workers do not have the right to organize or participate in politics. Unions are prohibited from participating in politics or party politics and are threatened with dissolution if they do so. (Sec. 207, Sec. 226(a) of the Labor Code and Sec. 51(12)(1) of Legislative Decree No. 24-82 of 1982.) Union activities come under strict supervision by the government. (Sec. 211(a) and (b) Labor Code).

The right of trade unions to further and defend the interests of workers has been severely limited in area of strikes:

Two thirds of the workers must vote in favor of a strike (Secs. 241(c); 222(f) and (m) Labor Code);

Prohibition of strikes and work stoppages by agricultural workers during the harvest with a few exceptions (Sec. 243(a) and 249);

Prohibition of strikes and work stoppages by those workers in sectors which the government deems as vital to the national economy (Sec. 243(d) and 249);

Intervention of the national police in illegal strikes (Sec. 255);

Imprisonment and trial of offenders (Sec. 257);

(Information for the two prior paragraphs comes from the ILO, Report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, Convention 87, Guatemala, 1985.)

The Mejia government has reiterated on numerous occasions that there will be complete "freedom of association" and full guarantees of trade union rights in Guatemala. At the same time, government spokesmen have emphasized the point that their support is dependent on trade unions working "within the framework of the law". Union leaders have asserted that there are not sufficient government guarantees of trade union freedom for the reactivation of trade unionism in Guatemala. The absence of trade union liberty and freedom to organize workers is illustrated in management threats to dismiss workers and close plants when workers try to organize unions; in assasinations and abduction of trade union leaders; in the absence of many new unions and the dismantling of many of the old unions; and in military and civil defense opposition to trade union activities in the areas of conflict where the Marxist-Leninist insurgency operates. (Labor Trends in Guatemala—1984, prepared by American Embassy, Guatemala, Pg. 12, 13.)

According to our sources, it is a regular practice that from time to time a trade union leader is killed prior to signing a collective bargaining agreement. The purpose of those persons who perpetrate these heinous crimes is to intimidate and weaken the new leadership rather than thwart the negotiating process. Appended to this report is a list of names and brief details of disappearances and murders, some of whom are examples of the above practice.

In collected confidential testimony the AFL-CIO has learned that, at least twice in 1985, trade unionists have been abducted, tortured and questioned about their trade union activities and their unions' plans concerning the upcoming political elections and were then released. With the State's strict prohibition of union participation in politics, one can't help but wonder who is perpetuating these acts and why.

One good example of the danger trade unionists face occured in 1980. On June 21, 1980, 25 leaders of the Confederation Nacional de Trabajadores (CNT National Workers' Confederation), were arrested by plainclothed and uniformed members of the National police. They were meeting at the CNT headquarters in Guatemala City to plan the funeral of a fellow trade unionist. This individual had been arrested the previous day and his body was found the next day bearing marks of torture and gunshot wounds. None of the 25 has been heard from since then. Guatemalan authorities subsequently claimed both that the unionists were never detained and that they were released. Cars belonging to some of them were later seen in National Police garages. (Amnesty International Urgent Action, AMR 34/03/85, Jan. 25, 1985.)

NICARAGUA

As soon as the Sandinistas gained power in 1979 they formed a new labor confederation, the Sandinista Center of Workers (Central Sandinista de Trabajadores, CST) and insisted that all trade unions s.ould belong to one labor center. This is a blatant violation of the freedom of association free from government control.

The Sandinistas proceeded to interfere with union elections, holding elections time and again until the results were to their liking. Unions which refused to affiliate, or once affiliated to disaffiliate from the CST, had their leaders arrested and jailed indefinitely, their members harassed and beaten and their offices attacked and destroyed.

Prior to the November, 1984 elections, Government officials informed certain union members that in return for their collaboration the Government would alleviate some of their financial problems. All they had to do was to convince the CUS (Confederacion de Unificacion Sindical—Confederation of Labor Unity) to leave the Democratic Coordinator, the democratic opposition within Nicaragua. The Democratic Coordinator refused to participate in the elections because of unfair campaign conditions. This subsequently led to the takeover of the CUS headquarters detailed below. For further information, we refer you to a complete report entitled "Sandinista Repression of Nicaraguan Trade Unions."

HAITI

Haiti's history of trade union rights has been a very poor one. The country suffers from corruption and extreme poverty, and the government-sponsored militia has suppressed the opposition. The system is characterized by political murders, imprisonment without trials, exiles and torture.

Article 43 of the Haitian Constitution states that workers have the right to organize trade unions. But other sections of the law limit the exercise of the freedom of association as follows:

Obligation to obtain the approval of the government on such conditions as may please the public authority, before establishing an association of more than 20 persons (Section 236 of the Penal Code);

Wide powers of supervision by the authorities over the trade unions (Section 34 of the Decree of 4 November 1983);

Imposition of compulsory arbitration by the Arbitration Board, automatically or at the demand of the Secretary of State for Labor or of only one of the parties to a dispute with view to ending a strike (Sections 185, 190, 199 and 200 of Amended Labor Code).

ILO Convention 87, in response to the above, requires:

The formation of unions, federations and confederations without prior authorization (Art. 2 & 5);

Public authorities should refrain from any interference that would restrict the rights of trade union organizations (Art. 3);

Compulsory arbitration is confined to cases of strikes in essential services in the strict sense of the term, those whose interruption would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population and arbitration should be used when both parties call for it (Art. 3 & 10). (Report of the Commission of Experts in the Application of Conventions and Recommenations; Convention 87, Haiti, 1985.)

During the 1982-83 sugar harvest the Government of Haiti received $2,225,000 in recruitment fees for 19,000 Haitian workers from the State Sugar Board of the Dominican Republic. The ILO recommends that the Government of Haiti receives money for actual recruitment costs, and accounts for it in the public accounts of the Government of Haiti. (Ibid, Convention 105, Abolition of Forced Labour, Dominican Republic, and Haiti, 1985.

The Government has been very successful in eliminating any strong union leadership. In 1979-1980 there was a series of crackdowns aimed at eliminating the independent trade union movement. One telling example of this is the arrest of Ives Richard, Secretary General of the Centrale autonome des travailleurs haitiennes (Autonomous Confederation of Haitian Workers) and the murder of trade unionist Siméon Jean Baptiste as described by Ives Richard.

"I was arrested without warrant at 10:00 a.m. during a meeting I was holding at the office of the Salesian Fathers with 35 workers from the textile company NEDSAN. Without warning a group of tontons macoutes burst in, and without much ado, started beating up the workers. Fellow trade unionist Siméon Jean Baptiste was killed by a bullet from the guns of the tontons macoutes of Jean-Claude Duvalier. I was taken with the other workers to the Casernes Dessalines where we were interrogated under torture and for the first time accused of being arsonists and communists agitators. From that moment I was kept completely separate from the other workers and transferred to the underground cells hidden below the National Palace." (Amnesty International, Haiti Briefing, March 1985, Pg. 8)

Since this purge of 1979-80 Haiti now has a docile labor movement fearful of government repraisals if it steps out of line. One evidence of this is that few collective bargaining agreements have been signed because the unions' back has been broken.

REPUBLIC OF KOREA

Korean labor law revisions enacted after the 1980 coup have imposed severe constraints on workers' rights to organize, and to engage in collective bargaining and collective action. Although specifically guaranteed by the Constitution, these rights are systematically denied through enforcement of laws designed to keep workers unorganized and unions ineffectual. Enforcement combined with the assurance of a blacklisted name and intimidation tactics condoned by government officials have prevented all but the most desperate workers from seeking to exercise their constitutionally guaranteed worker rights.

With the promulgation of revised labor law, Korean President Chun arrested or took into custody several hundred officers of labor unions and coerced them into "retirement." Union membership plummeted by 140,000, due primarily to the expulsion of experienced leaders and to the forced dissolution of labor unions that failed to meet the criteria in the new law.

Provisions in the labor law narrowed greatly the latitude of unions in relating to workers and of workers in selecting unions.

The restructuring of labor law in 1980 effectively dissolved interaction between national unions and their local and regional sections and seriously undermined worker freedom of association.

The law severely impinged on the rights of workers by allowing unions to operate only in establishments of more than 30 workers. With 80 percent of Korean workplaces operating with fewer than 30 workers, the vast majority of Koreans are prohibited by legal statute from joining a union. A worker not affiliated with a particular business or worksite is denied his right of association.

Notwithstanding certain political liberalizations within Korea, the practice of industrial relations has seen no improvement and continues to subject workers to the systematic denial of the rights of association and organizing. Even when unions adhere to the spirit and letter of the law the government frequently does not apply the law. A successful effort on the part of the Metalworkers' Union to organize thousands of workers at Dongil Steel was thwarted when, after delivering all necessary registration papers, the Government refused to certify the union as the workers' representative. Mass protests by the local president of the Metalworkers' Union and by the headquarters' staff of the Federation of Korean Trade Unions drew public attention to the government's refusal to adhere to its own laws. The Dongil Steel case is merely the latest of more than ten similar cases of the government's refusal to certify duly organized unions. In one case the government has claimed that the union did not have properly elected leadership. In fact, the elected leaders had been dismissed by the company precisely for their organizing activities.

Despite the erratic and unjust application of labor law, workers continue to organize themselves. The demand for representation among garment workers erupted recently in the two cases of Chongkye and Daiwoo Apparel. Barred from legal recognition because their individual workplaces employ fewer than 30 employees, workers in the Chongkye garment district banded together to protest poor working conditions and inadequate wages and to demand recognition of their independent union, the Chongkye Garment Workers' Union. Organized outside the government-condoned Federation of Korean Trade Unions, the Chongkye Union represents to the government an uncontrollable and therefore hostile force. The Chongkye Employers' Association advocates the legal recognition of the union, but the government has officially managed to ignore the clamor.

Recently, while demonstrating their dissatisfaction with the FKTU's meager support in combatting the company's anti-union drive, 80 Daiwoo Apparel Union members locked themselves inside the FKTU headquarters building. Demands included reinstatement of six workers dismissed from union activities, a wage increase, and the signing of a collective bargaining agreement. An agreement with the company was reached the following day, but on their return to work after the demonstration, workers were ambushed and beaten by company goons. a subsequent sit-in at the Democratic Korean Party headquarters yielded no concrete results. Through all the attendant publicity, the Korean government response was to side with the employer, take no action and see to it that no FKTU or Textile Workers Union official visited the hospitalized Daiwoo unionists. Ultimately, the company reneged on its agreement, and the union activists were placed on trial.

The failure of the government to enforce the labor law and to hold employers responsible for their actions confounds the industrial peace that the government demands. In the process of dictating the industrial relations system and violating basic worker rights of collective bargaining and association, the government makes no provision for serious input from workers.

The sharp increase in the number of unfair labor practices failed by unions is directly attributable to the balance of legal superiority held by the employer. The strengthening of the employers' superiority as well as the impunity enjoyed by employers form an institutionalized barrier as effective as the official labor code in preventing workers from exercising their rights.

Registration of complaints or requests for action to the FKTU headquarters seldom result in affirmative action for workers' organizations. The autonomy of the FKTU is undermined at all levels by government interference which includes a large network of informers who are promised personal material gain in exchange for cooperation and information. Interference in the form of physical intimidation, such as at Daiwoo Apparel, has discouraged the emergence of local level, independent trade union activism.

Even the government of the Republic of Korea has admitted its denial of workers' rights and the inconsistency between the Constitution and the labor code. Even the censored Korean press regularly remarks on the need to revise the labor laws and improve working conditions: "Admitting that Korean economic conditions are different, . . . we cannot deny that there is a discontent among the people concerned because there have not been sufficient guarantees to protect workers' rights in terms of organizing unions, collective bargaining and collection action since revisions of the labor laws in 1980." The delay in Korea's application for membership in the International Labor Organization lends credence to the conjecture that the government is unwilling to subject its laws to the scrutiny of that international body. According to the U.S. Department of State Country Reports on Human Rights Practices for 1984, "The single national labor federation, the Federation of Korean Trade Unions (FKTU), and its national affiliate unions are not controlled by the government. Their freedom of action, however, is severely circumscribed by law . . . All local unions must be organized within individual enterprises, creating a structure of thousands of individual unions, most of them small and weak . . . Collective actions and strikes, though technically legal, are to all intents and purposes forbidden. Religious labor ministries such as the Catholic Young Christian Workers and the Protestant Urban Industrial Mission are also severely limited in the assistance, which they can provide the unions. Under these circumstances, government and employer influence has greatly exceeded that of unions in setting wages and resolving other major labor issues."

PARAGUAY

The Stroessner regime of Paraguay is the longest running dictatorship in this Hemisphere and has been in power since 1954.

A predominant characteristic of the dictatorship is constant interference in union affairs. The Confederation of Paraguayan workers is the only legally recognized union and is widely known to be at the service of the Stroessner government.

There are dozens of unions affiliated to the CPT, but most of them have only a few members. When they rarely try to deviate from party line and government policy, there is quick and harsh reprisal.

According to the U.S. State Department's Country Reports on Human Rights for 1984 the right to free association is particularly curtailed in the case of the Paraguayan labor force. Paraguayan workers are not permitted to organize freely, as demonstrated by the case described below. Strikes are not permitted by the Government, and efforts at collective bargaining by the few independent labor unions which are permitted to exist are sometimes frustrated, with the tacit backing of the Government.

The National Construction Workers Union (SINATRAC) replaced its government-stooge Secretary General with another who truly represents the rank and file. All attempts to get the new Executive Board recognized by the government failed. In spite of this, the dissidents conducts a successful organizing campaign of the Yacyreta Dam and proceeded to organize the construction site of a steel mill close to Asuncion. In retaliation for their action, the Army arrested the five organizers before a membership meeting outside the steel mill construction site. They were held for 18 days, August 18 to Sept. 4, 1984, without being charged with any crime.

Subsequent to their release, the five union officers were threatened with arrest and imprisonment if they were seen again in the vicinity of the steel mill. When SINATRAC planned union elections for October 14, 1984, as required by law, police informed them to either cancel the meeting for that day or be arrested again. Nevertheless, elections were held a week later, and the democractic slate won. To date the government has not recognized the legitimately and freely elected officers of SINATRAC.

This is just one of many examples of the blatant violations of ILO Conventions 87 and 98 by the Stroessner government.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEASE. I am pleased to yield to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much.

I am so pleased to join the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE] in his special order and to congratulate him for taking it, although I am sure he would not wish any congratulations at all to speak about the rights to organize freely,

I have listened with interest to the discussion regarding a number of countries, and I just wanted to say a few words about a situation that is often commented on, that of Solidarity in Poland. It just seemed that it was not appropriate for there to be a discussion of the rights to organize with trade unionism without having some reference to Solidarity.

A few days ago I saw a program on the MacNeil-Lehrer show. It was a documentary of about a half-hour, and it was a remarkable piece of journalism. It included interviews with Lech Walesa and others who are trying to keep the flame of Solidarity alive.

Poland has had a checkered history. It has had many proud moments, and it has had some moments of which, I think, one would be less proud. But today the Solidarity movement struggles to survive against the most formidable odds.

I sat there, I am sure, as did millions of other Americans, admiring the courage of people like Lech Walesa and others as they attempt to keep that flame still flickering. They are being prosecuted and they are being persecuted, and here we are in the comfortable environs of this country facing, we hope soon, another holiday season. But others are in the winter of that season, attempting to maintain just the basic human rights—not "maintain" them because they do not have them, but they are trying to win them.

I met with a representative of Solidarity at a human rights meeting in Ottawa some months ago, and there in Ottawa he described the efforts of their office in Paris to get across their methods, as well as the valiant efforts of people who remain in Poland and who are not going to leave their homeland while it is not free.

So today I would like to join my good friend, the gentleman from Ohio. I would like to stand with him, if I might, and I would, knowing his own feelings, like to add this moment of statement of continued commitment on our part to do whatever we can to help those who are trying to bring about freedom of trade unions through all these efforts in Poland today.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his contribution.

I would note that, having been as interested in labor rights as I have been for a number of years, certainly I would have no greater ally in that endeavor than the gentleman from Michigan. I am grateful to him for his assistance in the past, for his solid support, and for his participation in this special order today.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, now I would like to talk about Suriname. Suriname is a very small place, a very small place indeed. One would wonder why we should be concerned in this House or in this country about labor rights in Suriname. Yet if a number of women, especially those who would be shopping in stores during this Christmas season, would look at the labels on their blouses and dresses, they would find more often than they might think the label, "Made in Suriname."

What that means, of course, is that those products on the shelves in the stores are there competing with American-made products, products made by garment workers in South Carolina or Georgia, in North Carolina or Alabama, in New York or wherever. So I think it is worthwhile for us to realize what kind of working conditions the workers in Suriname face as they are making products which may well tend to put our own American workers out of a job.

□ 1610

Again, Mr. Speaker, this comes from AFL-CIO testimony last December:

SURINAME

In December 1982, Cyril Daal, President of De Moederbond (Suriname's Labor Federation) was killed, along with 14 other prominent leaders. One important event leading up to the murder was Cyril Daal's call for democratic elections. When Desi Bouterse came to power through a coup d'etat on February 25, 1980, he promised elections in 1982. When it became apparent he was not going to follow through on his promise, Cyril Daal and De Moederbond began to put pressure on him to do so. He lead protests against Bouterse's visit to Cuba and during Maurice Bishop's visit to Suriname, something that greatly embarrassed Bouterse.

On December 8, 1982, Cyril Daal was picked-up and taken to military headquarters called Fort Zeelandia, along with 14 others. The next day, Lt. Col. Bouterse claimed they were shot trying to escape, all 15. The real story which came out later was they were beaten, tortured and shot at close range. One eye-witness saw Bouterse personally castrate and then shoot Daal to death. So much for the treatment in Suriname of those who seek decent working conditions and decent wages for the working people.

Since the brutal murder of Cyril Daal, the labor movement has been very subdued in its activities. One must conclude that the Government has so intimidated trade unionists that they are fearful of demanding and exercising their rights as provided under ILO Conventions.

According to the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions' [ICFTU] report, "though legally speaking no limitation on the fundamental trade union rights has been imposed, the fact remains that trade union activities are close to paralyzed. No strike could therefore be organized since 8 December and the trade union leaders are extremely cautious. During a meeting with leaders of the unions belonging to the labor federation, De Moederbond, clear indications were made of the atmosphere of repression in which the trade union movement is developing its activities."

There is such fear of the Bourterse Government that unions are trying to find a middle ground to tread between not collaborating with the Government and not posing as a threat to it either.

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. PEASE. I am happy to yield to my friend.

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I think he makes an interesting point with the example of Suriname of what happens in a country like Suriname and what happened in Grenada, what is happening putting the final touches on the situation in Nicaragua. In these Marxist-Leninist regimes there is at the beginning some vestige of free labor movement, but as the regime consolidates its power, it either co-ops all of the existing vestiges of free labor, or as in the case of Suriname, totally destroys that vestige.

I think we are seeing this today in Nicaragua with the recent changes brought about by the Sandinista regime. Labor unions, as we know them in this country, labor unions as they continue to struggle and exist in Guatemala, in Chile and other right wing dictatorships, have ceased to exist. If you take then the final stage of this consolidation, which is the Communist government, you find that all over the world there are still labor unions, that in no way, shape or form, do they have any resemblance to the kind of labor unions that we are familiar with and the kind of labor unions that the ILO is seeking to support worldwide.

In the Communist governments of Eastern Europe, outside of Poland, in the Soviet Union, in Cuba, in Vietnam, in North Korea, there are government-controlled labor unions, that these labor unions are strictly voices of the communist regime.

It is interesting that in the gentleman's presentation on the Western Hemisphere and the state of labor unions, the gentleman did not mention Cuba. Now, I am not criticizing the gentleman. The reason, and we both understand the reason, that Cuba was not mentioned is that there are no labor unions there in any way that we would understand the meaning of unions left in Cuba. They have been totally wiped out.

I just wanted to add that in addition to the countries that the gentleman is characterizing in the way they treat their labor unions, there are a number of countries around the world, they are Communist countries, that have totally destroyed any and all vestiges of labor unions as we know them. It is not possible even to get up and stand on the floor and describe the conditions of labor unions in these countries, like Cuba, like the Soviet Union, like Vietnam, like North Korea, like Bulgaria.

There is no ability to do that because there is absolutely no information on what is happening to workers in those countries. The only information we have is an occasional bit of intelligence about an illegal manifestation of union activity that somehow took place far off, far away somewhere, and we never hear about it again. So it does not make our newspapers. It does not make the ILO report. It does not make a special order on the floor because we have absolutely no information on the state of labor unions in these countries, because labor unions have ceased to exist.

I thought it was important to point that out and I think the gentleman is doing an excellant job in characterizing the state of affairs of labor movements in countries around the world. We should just for a moment consider the totally anti-union conditions, anti-labor conditions, that exist in the so-called workers paradise.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the gentleman very much for his contribution.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make the point that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has a long and distinguished record in this House of leadership in matters of concern about human rights. I value his participation in this special order. I think he makes a very, very valuable point. Labor unions are friends of workers. Labor unions try to help workers get better working conditions, better wages.

In country after country around the world, they are more than that. They are also friends of democracy and enemies of dictatorships, and the dictatorships understand that it is not possible to have a successful dictatorship and to allow freedom in any manifestation, including in the work place. That is why it is both right wing and dictatorships and Marxist-Leninist dictatorships alike repress labor unions whenever they appear.

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further on that point, it is an important one and I think we should all pay tribute to the work that the AFL-CIO has done around the world in this regard. They are not simply out to organize workers. They do have at heart the principles of democracy and freedom.

In particular, the AFL-CIO AFILD, has been very effective in Central America. Indeed, if you read William Doherty's recent report on conditions in Nicaragua, you realize that the Nicaraguans have gone the last step, have fully made their country into a totalitarian Communist state and have just about entirely destroyed those vestiges that up until very recently still existed, although very narrowly, in Nicaragua. They have virtually disappeared as of today.

Mr. Doherty and AFILD and the AFL-CIO have been very strong in pointing that out to us in the Congress and to their colleagues in the United States.

Again, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, finally I would like to turn to the Philippines and I would emphasize that I do not pick on the Philippines. I am not selecting them because of the elections that are coming up soon. Indeed, labor rights violations have been going on for a long, long time. The Philippines, and I have been concerned about them for a long time. I would like to just cite a couple of case studies of individuals in the Philippines which I think my colleagues will find interesting.

LABOR CONDITIONS IN THE PHILIPPINES

Twenty three-year-old Tess sewed Barbie Doll clothes on the night shift for Mattel Corporation for five years. Each hour, she had to complete a quota of 300 tennis suits, or receive a disciplinary warning. Often, Tess and her co-workers were forced to work four or more hours overtime and many suffered breathing problems or anemia from exposure to cotton dust or other poor working conditions. Last April, Mattel suddenly closed down operations in the industrial zone, an area where labor unrest has grown dramatically in recent years. The company moved to nearby Manila, next door to a military encampment.

Bernie is a worker on a sugar plantation in southern island of Negros. His 28 peso daily wage is lower than the legal minimum, but his employer, like most, doesn't pay attention to minimum wage laws. Bernie's family lives in a bamboo hut without electricity or running water. Now the prospect of unemployment looms large for Bernie, his family and 200,000 other sugar workers as the sugar industry faces imminent collapse. He and his fellow workers asked the landowner for the use of land to grow subsistence crops, hoping to stave off hunger. Instead, the landowner, who fears an effort at land reform, responded by hiring military-trained security guards who often spy on, abuse and even kill workers, especially union leaders.

Tess and Bernie are typical Filipino workers. As members of the country's poor majority, they are being deeply affected by the current political, economic and military crisis. In the last two years, the human rights and economic situation has gone from bad for the country's 21 million workers. Nevertheless, many workers are playing an important role in the popular movement for justice and democracy in the country. What exactly are the key issues confronting Philippine workers today?

Trade union repression

Philippine workers risk imprisonment, torture, abduction and murder for engaging in legitimate union activities. The labor repression that became a hallmark of government rule during the martial law period in the 1970s has continued unabated since martial law ended in 1981. Selected statistics tell the grim story of labor repression: nine workers were killed in picketlines during three first three months of 1985; 42 workers and labor leaders have been killed since 1982; 77 workers or labor leaders participating in strikes or protests were arrested between 1983 and early 1985; and 31 workers and union leaders remain in jail as of August 1985, either without charges and with charges related to their union activity. Workers and unionists report that it is common for employers to hire "private armies"—security guards trained by the military who harass, intimidate, spy on and even violently attach workers and union leaders.

During the past several years, the government has also unleashed a series of attacks on the opposition union federation Kilusang Mayo Uno (KMU). The most serious crackdown was the September 1982 arrest of 69 KMU unionists on charges of "subversion," including most of the organization's top leadership. The military confiscated materials, files and equipment from KMU offices and the offices of four union affilates. The incident provoked a strong condemnation from the International Labor Organization Freedom of Association Committee, in response to a formal complaint filed by the KMU. However, the Philippine government ignored the ILO's recommendations for immediate remedial actions.

Anti-labor laws

Philippine workers get tangled in a myriad of legal restrictions when they attempt to exercize their rights to associate, organize and strike.

For example, most public employees, such as government workers, teachers, public hospital personnel and transportation workers, are not allowed to unionize at all. Among organized workers, those in a wide range of "essential" industries—e.g. public utilities, banks and companies producing for export—are prohibited from going on strike. Workers participating in such an "illegal" strike face a risk of six months imprisonment. Then, other strikes are not considered legal unless two-thirds of workers in a workplace elect to strike and file a notice of strike with the government 15 days in advance.

On top of these laws, the Minister of Labor and President Marcos can order striking workers back to work and enforce compulsory arbitration in labor disputes "adversely affecting the national interest." And most recently, President Marcos issued a order in May authorizing the use of police and military forces in enforcing back-to-work orders.

For many years, these and other legal measures have been strongly and repeatedly criticized by the International Labor Organization Committee of Experts in its annual reports and reviews. In addition, the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (ICFTU) recently filed its own complaint with the ILD regarding public employees' lack of right to organize. The complaint followed a fairly critical report on legal restrictions and labor relations practices by a 1984 ICFTU fact-finding mission to the Philippines. (see ILO and ICFTU reports attached). However, the Philippine government has taken no steps toward reforming its labor legislation.

Economic crisis

The severe downturn of the Philippine economy, brought on by worldwide economic recession and exacerbated by austerity measures recommended by the International Monetary Fund, has taken its toll on workers jobs and income. The last few years have seen a pronounced trend of plant closings, a fall in real wages and growing unemployment. According to Philippine government figures, more than 86,000 workers were laid off in 1984, and other analyses suggest that the figure may actually be much higher. At least 200,000 sugar workers are out of work so far this year as the sugar industry, hit hard by the oversupply in world market and internal inefficiencies, has plunged headlong into an economic downspin. Unemployment and underemployment together approach 45 percent of the Philippine workforce, with two-thirds of the entire population living below the poverty threshold.

While average wages are rising steadily, the wage hikes are far outstripped by the rate of inflation. Thus while Philippine workers had 36 percent more money in their pockets at the end of 1984 than at the beginning of the year, they had to pay 55 percent more for basic food items, clothing and housing and transportation. The great majority of Philippine workers today earn only the minimum wage of $3.17 per day, less that normal food costs for an average family of six. However, the government exempts many companies from paying minimum wage, while others simply ignore the standard, pushing workers to strike for the wages legally owed them. And Philippine workers enjoy no retirement benefits, no unemployment compensation, and minimal medical benefits—a situation which understandably heightens workers' concern for job security.

How are Philippine workers responding to this crisis?

All these conditions combine to produce a rapidly polarizing conflict between workers, management and the government. Labor unrest stepped up dramatically last year, often leading to an open defiance of government labor laws and regulations. In 1984, lockouts and strikes, even in those industries where strikes are banned, happened more frequently, lasted twice as long and involved nearly twice as many workers on the average over the previous year, and these numbers increased again during early 1985. Tens of thousands of workers in major cities regularly turn out into the streets for protests and rallies. And more and more workers are participating in a new protest action known as the "people's strike," in which workers along with shopkeepers, housewives, students, teachers, farmers and others cease their normal activity, bringing local economies to a halt.

Union activity is also taking on a more openly political stance. In negotiations with management or government officials as well as in political rallies, workers not only press for economic demands, but raise political issues such as IMF austerity program, government plans economic development and the dominant role of foreign corporations in the economy.

Of course, the upsurge in labor activities has set off a new spate of clashes between workers and police and military forces at picketlines and protest rallies.

Why should U.S. unionists be concerned about the Philippines?

One link between U.S. workers and Philippine workers is that many share the same employers. At the same time, other U.S. workers have lost their jobs when U.S. companies shifted their plants to the Philippines in search of cheap, non-union labor—a trend set by U.S. electronics, apparel, toy and consumer appliance firms during the last decade. With its rich natural resources and low-cost and largely English-speaking workforce, Philippines has been one of the most attractive overseas investment sites for U.S. corporations. Before the recent economic crisis, which has cooled investors toward the country, Business International described Philippine labor as "one of the cheapest (employers prefer to call it competitive) in the world."

Some of the largest U.S. corporations in the Philippines include Mobil Oil, Pepsico, Colgate Palmolive, R.J. Reynolds, Procter and Gamble, Castle and Cook, Carnation International, Union Carbide, Advanced Micro Devices, Texas Instruments, Good Year Tire and Rubber, Firestone Tire and Rubber, Johnson and Johnson, General Foods, Kimberly Clark, IBM, Bank of America, Manufacturers Hanover Trust, Chemical Bank and Chase Manhattan.

What do Philippine workers gain when they get jobs taken away from U.S. workers? Along with jobs that offer no security, meager wages and sometimes dangerous working conditions, Philippine workers often face union-busting and labor repression under American employers. Following are several recent examples of labor repression at U.S. companies in the Philippines:

Two workers were killed and five family members wounded early last January when a jeepload of armed men fired on a picketline at Franklin Baker Company, a subsidiary of General Foods Corporation which processes dried coconut. The workers, who had been on strike for a week to protest the dismissal of several hundred union leaders and the company's failure to pay the minimum wage, have evidence suggesting that company managers instigated the attack.

Workers at Baxter Travenol Co., a U.S.-owned manufacturer of dextrose solution used for intravenous feeding, have picketed since February after they were locked out by American management, who claimed that economic difficulties forced them to close. Two months earlier, the workers had won a Supreme Court case arguing for legal recognition of their union, despite management's efforts to buy them off and threats to close the plant if the case succeeded. The workers suspect that the plant will reopen under a different name.

Job applicants at the Texas Instrument plant must submit to a battery of tests and interviews prior to hiring that are partially aimed at disclosing attitudes toward unions and history of union involvement. Applicants are told that Texas Instruments does not intend to have a unionized plant and those with union experience or union sympathies are not hired. The management reportedly keeps computerized records of test results and shares the information with other companies in the same industrial zone.

In pursuit of maximum profit, multinationals do pit workers against one another in a competition for jobs. But workers in the U.S. and the Philippines can only overcome this strategy and begin to wield control over these multinationals if they join together to address their common problems.

EXCERPTS FROM: THE PHILIPPINES: HUMAN RIGHTS AFTER MARTIAL LAW, REPORT OF A FACT-FINDING MISSION BY THE INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION OF JURISTS, GENEVA, SWITZERLAND, 1984

"The limitations on civil liberties referred to elsewhere in this report constitute serious limitations on the rights of workers. . . . Since significant infringements on (civil) rights exist in the Philippines, the right to freedom of association for trade union purposes is not satisfactorily guaranteed."

"The ILO Committee of Experts . . . has found the right to strike in Philippine legislation to be unduly restricted . . . the limitations on strikes in export industries, despite workers allegations of inadequate labor conditions, appears to result in workers becoming victims of the government's industrial policy."

"The comments of the respected Committee of Experts indicate that Philippine legislation, even following the lifting of martial law, contains serious violations of the fundamental principles of freedom of association and trade union rights."

"Arrests by Presidential orders and harassment of union leaders and members have been common since the termination of martial law. . . . The evidence is strong that the arrests of KMU leaders were intended to curb the militant labor activities of this union. The Economist reported in December 1983, that the KMU had been hobbled by the continued imprisonment of the leaders of subversion charges."

"The militant actions of the relatively small KMU are to be contrasted with the inaction of the large government sponsored union, the Trade Union Congress of the Philippines, which has generally maintained silence about the problems of workers."

"The present labor unrest in the Philippines appears to be caused by the legitimate demands of the workers."

"It is apparent . . . that labor conditions are unsatisfactory in the (Bataan Export Processing) Zone and that remedial measures are urgently needed. Harassment and suppression of labor activities are not the solution . . . conditions in the Zone require a change in the labor laws which would permit collective strike action over inadequate working conditions even in export-related industries."

"The appalling living and labor conditions on the sugar plantations in Negros should be a major concern of the government, (and) the planters. . . . Ultimately, however, it will only be by according sugar workers the right to organize freely without harassment and the right to protest against their conditions that improvement will take place. . . . Concerted efforts should also be made to provide alternative work for the numbers of sugar workers likely to be displaced by mechanization."

REPORT TO ICFTU MISSION TO THE PHILIPPINES

In August and September 1982, 69 trade unionists of the labor organization Kilusang Mayo Uno (KMU) were arrested. The International Confederation of Trade Unions (ICFTU) protested against the arrest, while the Trade Union Congress of the Philippines (TUCP), the ICFTU affiliate in the country, defended the government's action. As a result, the TUCP invited a fact-finding mission to the Philippines to investigate the labor union situation. The following are excerpts from the report of the fact-finding mission submitted to the ICFTU Executive Board in May 1984. Members of fact-finding team included:

J. Vanderveken, ICFTU General Secretary; Irving Brown, AFL-CIO; Cliff Dolan, Australian Council of Trade Unions; Moss Evans, Chairman of International Committee, British Trade Union Congress; Wim Kok, FNV Netherlands; Hans Fogestrom, LO Sweden; Toyojiro Noda, Zendentsu, Japan; Masao Aihara, Domei, Japan; V.S. Mathur, ARO General Secretary; and P.H. de Jonge, ICFTU Secretariat.

"The increasing unemployment, noticeable especially in industrial areas and therefore in the towns, and more particularly in the shanty towns and slums of the large urban centers, is adding substantially to the already widspread proverty."

"(The) Labour Code does not cover the public service, so that in this sector unions enjoying the protection of the Code cannot be formed. This . . . is of course a situation which, apart from it being contradictory to ILO established standards, is unacceptable to trade unions."

"The Labour Code as such is on the whole consonant with the ILO conventions . . . but the practice can be different . . . the majority of strikes have been declared illegal . . . the conclusion is that the right to strike is not observed as a matter of course, and thus from the trade union point of view constitutes a serious infringement of workers' rights."

"The mission heard of cases of workers (imprisoned) in Mindanao and Negros, as well as other parts of Luzon . . . The ICFTU should continue to demand their release."

"It is already clear that the general human rights situation causes grave concern, and the ICFTU would so well to watch developments very closely indeed and to take up appropriate cases and occurrences in a vigorous manner."

"In . . . reaction to the oft-heard assertion that the TUCP is pro-Marcos government . . . the TUCP should be judged on its record as a functioning trade union. It has constantly fought for increased wages and better conditions, and lest the relationship with the Ministry of Labour and Employment was deemed too cozy, (the TUCP president) reminded the mission of his fight with Labour Minister Blas Ople to remove the Assistant Minister Inciong, whom he thought inimical to workers' interests."

"It is to be expected that the Marcos regime will give way to a more democratic one, and that those who have been close to the previous regime will be reproached for their too docile attitude. Such a reproach is directed against some people in the leadership of the ICFTU affiliate, the TUCP. . . . The mission hopes and trusts that the TUCP will plainly show its distances from the regime, and work for the restoration of political democracy and show itself to be an active force within the democracy, which is going to be badly needed in the reconstruction after the Marcos period. . . The ability of the TUCP to act in this manner will largely determine its position and representativeness in the new era that is opening for the Philippines."

"Whenever there was a strike, employers often hired 'goons' (scabs) and/or called in the police and even the military, who very willingly cooperated. Thus violence erupted at strikes. . . . Police violence was an everyday occurrence, and this was very often caused by employers simply not implementing the wages as laid down in the Collective Agreements."

"It was often said that strikes were not necessary, as arbitration was available. However, arbitration before the labour courts took an interminable time—quite usual is a three-year period. . . . There was even a case that had dragged on for twelve years without a decision being reached. Is it to be wondered at that strikes were preferred!"

"The mission also met the special section of the Ministry of Defense charged with combating subversion. . . . What in general struck the mission was the virtual admission of the close involvement of the military, and that on an organized basis, in public affairs or at least in pursuance of the policies and actions of the Marcos government and its attempts to suppress opposition. The mission still wonders why such an activity on the part of the Ministry of Defence is at all permissible."

"Renewed attempts at the cooperation of all democratic trade unions should be pursued and trade union rights in their full extent guaranteed; we particularly refer to the right to strike which is far too hemmed in; the right to form unions in the public sector, and an end to the harassment unionists often face, especially in rural areas, when engaging in normal trade union action."

INTERNATIONAL CONFEDERATION OF FREE TRADE UNIONS,
Brussels, Belgium, March 7, 1985.

COMPLAINT OF THE ICFTU AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES FOR VIOLATIONS OF TRADE UNION RIGHTS

MR. FRANCIS BLANCHARD,
Director General, International Labour Office, Geneva, Switzerland.

MR. DIRECTOR GENERAL, The ICFTU is greatly concerned about the trade union rights situation in the philippines, in particular the restrictions relating to the right to strike, the requirements for the registration of trade unions, the powers of inquiry conferred on the Department of Labour in respect of the financial management of trade unions and the harassment, arrest and detention of trade unionists, as reflected in the observations of the Committee of Experts and the reports of the Committee on Freedom of Association concerning Cases Nos. 1157 and 1192.

However, an important infringement of trade union rights by the Government of the Philippines has so far gone unnoticed, namely the denial of the right to organise in the public sector. While Article 244 of the Labour Code of the Republic of the Philippines guarantees the right to "self-organisation" to workers in commercial, industrial and agricultural enterprises, the workers in government and local government services, as well as workers in government-owned or controlled corporations, which are covered by the Civil Service Law and Rules, are excluded from the right to organise in trade unions. This constitutes a fundamental violation of one of the basic trade union rights recognised by Convention No. 87, viz. the right of workers, whoever their employer is, to establish and join organisations of their own choosing. It leaves a substantial proportion of the workers of the Philippines without the protection and furtherance of their interests by trade union organisations.

The ICFTU requests you to consider this communication as a formal complaint against the Government of the Philippines for violation of trade union rights and to transmit this complaint to the Committee on Freedom of Association of the ILO Governing Body.

Yours sincerely,

JOHN VANDEROEKEU,
General Secretary.

LABOR RIGHTS VIOLATIONS IN THE PHILIPPINES

(Submitted by the Institute for Policy Studies, Philippine Workers Support Group, Philippine Resource Center, Clergy and Laity Concerned)

THE GSP

In 1974, the United States enacted a piece of trade legislation of considerable significance for the Third World: the Generalized System of Preferences. The legislation permits billions of dollars worth of goods from developing countries duty free access to the U.S. market.

When the U.S. Congress renewed the GSP in late 1984, it enacted important new guidelines to help ensure that the legislation does not adversely affect the welfare of workers in the U.S. and in the Third World. Specifically, before the U.S. president declares a country eligible for GSP benefits, he must certify that it abides by the following internationally recognized rights of workers:

1. The right to association:
2. The right to organize and bargain collectively:
3. a prohibition on the use of any form of forced or compulsory labor:
4. A minimum age for the employment of children: and
5. acceptable conditions of work with respect to minimum wages, hours of work and occupational safety and health.

This new piece of legislation is of historic importance for trade deliberations in this country and indeed for the world. For the first time, the U.S. government is going to the heart of the factors that are undermining the well-being of workers everywhere. How?

We live in a world where large corporations are able to shift plants and resources around the globe with ease. A central factor involved in corporate decisions over where to locate factories is the cost of labor. If developing country governments exploit labor at below subsistence wages, U.S. corporations will gladly close down a U.S. plant and shift production overseas. The U.S. government has encouraged labor repression overseas by granting duty free treatment to imports produced under these gruelling conditions, imports which erode U.S. jobs and push down wages and living standards for U.S. workers.

The new GSP legislation offers, for the first time, an opportunity to remove a major incentive for labor repression overseas. It sends a loud signal that the U.S. will not reward the brutal suppression of labor rights with free access to our market.

THE PHILIPPINES AND THE GSP

The Philippines is one of the top 15 beneficiaries of the GSP, supplying 1.6 percent of the total goods imported by the U.S. under the trade agreement in 1982. The country has received these benefits despite longstanding government policies and practices that severely restrict workers rights. This testimony presents evidence that the Philippine government violates several of the labor standards specified in the 1984 legislation and argues that it therefore should be suspended from eligibility for GSP benefits.

Major Philippine products that receive duty free access to the U.S. under the GSP include sugar, furniture, and electronic products. (See Appendix) The general trend of labor repression in the Philippines affects these export industries as well as all others. Because of the government's desire to attract foreign investment with the promise of a docile, low-wage workforce, certain export industries suffer even greater labor union repression than most non-export industries. This fact will be explored in more detail in the following pages.

For the purposes of this testimony, the labor standards shall be defined and interpreted according to conventions adopted by the United Nations International Labor Organization (ILO). The Philippines is a member of the ILO and has signed more than 20 ILO conventions.

The Philippine government violates the abovementioned labor standards in essentially two ways: 1.) by promulgating laws that fail to conform with ILO conventions and 2.) by pursuing labor relations practices that conform neither to ILO conventions nor to its own laws. Some documentation for these charges is found in the form of official reviews of Philippine labor policies and practices by the ILO or other international bodies. Other evidence exists only in the form of personal testimony, media reports, or reports by unofficial organizations. We have provided as much documentation as possible for the following charges.

The Philippines' violations of the basic rights of workers are outlined below according to the five categories of labor rights specified in the amended GSP legislation.

1. THE RIGHT TO ASSOCIATION

A. Legal restrictions.—In 1953, the Philippines ratified ILO Convention No. 87, the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize. This convention states that "workers and employers . . . have the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization." Nevertheless, the Philippine government has a long history of placing legal restrictions on the right to association. Over the past decade, this has been done primarily through a series of presidential decrees and legislative amendments to the 1973 Philippine Labor Code, which originally protected the right to association. The labor code is now the operative body of labor law in the Philippines.

Although Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos formally ended martial law in 1981, government policies and practices have not changed substantially since then. Present day labor rights violations grow out of an atmosphere of intense labor repression that marked the martial law period from 1972 to 1981. During that time, Marcos declared a virtual ban on strikes, followed by tight restrictions on labor organizing. Some of the worst repression was directed at workers in export-oriented industries. Marcos's plan to steer the economy toward export-oriented industrialization depended largely on suppressing workers' economic and political demands. (Walden Bello et al., "Development Debacle: The World Bank in the Philippines," San Francisco, Institute for Food and Development Policy, 1982, pp. 142-144.)

The Philippine government's legal restrictions on workers' right to associate and right to organize have been the subject of review by the ILO Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations in each of its yearly reports since 1978. In its 1984 report, the Committee cited the following sections of the Philippine Labor Code as incompatible with

Convention No. 87. (Note: The right to strike is not expressly included in the amended GSP legislation. However, the ILO Freedom of Association Committee and Committee of Experts clearly considers the right to strike an extension of the rights to associate and to organize.)

(1) Section 237, which requires approval by 30 percent of workers before a union can be recognized. This high quota, the Committee says, "may constitute an obstacle to the rights of workers to establish organizations of their own choosing."

(2) Section 264, as amended in 1982, which authorizes compulsory arbitration in labor disputes adversely affecting the national interest.

(3) Another article of the same section, as amended by national law 130 in 1982, which lists the industries that affect the national interest and are therefore non-strikeable. These include "but (are) not limited to public utilities, companies engaged in the generation or distribution of energy, banks, hospitals, and export-oriented industries including those within export processing zones." This amendment was adopted after the total ban on strikes was suspended with the lifting of martial law. As a result, most strikes are still declared illegal.

(4) The same section, which also requires that two-thirds of a union's members vote in favor of a strike in order for that strike to be valid. This requirement, according to the Committee, "hinders the normal exercise of the right to strike." Another article in this section not mentioned by the ILO demands that unions file a notice of strike with the government 15 to 30 days in advance.

(5) Section 270 of the Labor, Code, which prohibits foreigners from participating either directly or indirectly in any form of trade union activity.

(6) Section 273 of the Labor Code, as amended in 1982, which imposes six months imprisonment on workers who participate in strikes that are considered illegal.

(7) Presidential Decrees 1834 and 1835 of 1981, which state that any person participating in picketing or in similar group action who is deemed to be acting for propaganda purposes against the government shall be punished with life imprisonment.

For several years, the ILO Committee of Exports has reiterated essentially the same criticisms of labor legislation in the Philippines. Nevertheless, the Philippine government has made no efforts toward reform. As the International Commission of Jurists notes in its 1984 report, "The comments of the respected Committee of Experts indicate that Philippine legislation . . . contains serious violations of the fundamental principles of freedom of association and trade union rights." (The Philippines: Human Rights After Martial Law. The International Commission of Jurists, Geneva, Switzerland, 1984) The Committee's finding consistently cite bans or limitations on the right to strike as violations of Convention No. 87. The U.S. State Department also acknowledges the ILO's criticisms in its most recent country report on human rights. (Country Report on Human Rights, U.S. Department of State, 1984)

In addition to the legal restrictions cited by the ILO, there are at least two other legislative measures that infringe on the right of association. First, national law no. 227 permits employers to transport materials and products in and out of a workplace during a strike. This law renders ineffective workers right to strike. Second, public service workers such as teachers, government employees, and public hospital personnel are denied any right to associate or organize. This is a much broader restriction than exists in most other countries, which limit bans on unionization to truly essential public employees, such as military, police and top-ranking policy makers. A high-level mission from the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions which visited the Philippines in 1984 called this blanket prohibition "contradictory to established standards . . . (and) unacceptable to trade unions." (Report of ICFTU mission to Asia, presented before the Executive Board, May 24 and 25, 1984, Brussels, Belgium.)

B. Labor relations practice.—Legal restrictions aside, the Philippine government repeatedly engages in, or knowingly permits, practices that deny workers the right to association. As the ICFTU mission noted in its summary report, "the Labour Code as such is on the whole consonant with ILO conventions . . . but the practice can be quite different."

The general trend of repression in the Philippines directly infringes on workers' labor rights, the most fundamental of which is the right of association. Data compiled by the Task Force Detainees of the Philippines, a human rights organization, and the KMU, one of three national union organizations in the country, give a sense of the repression directed against workers and union leaders:

Seventy-seven workers were arrested between 1983 and early 1985 while engaging in such activities as protesting human rights abuses, participating in rallies, or waging a strike. Many have been tortured while in prison.

Thirty-one workers and union leaders remain in jail as of March 1985, either without charges or with charges related to their union activity.

Twelve workers or union leaders have been missing since 1977 after being arrested or abducted.

Eight workers were killed while on picketlines between April 1984 and March 1985.

Forty-two workers or labor leaders are confirmed killed since 1982 for reasons believed to be related to their union activity.

(Repression of Philippine Workers: A Dossier, II, KMU External Affairs Committee, 1985; Human Rights Situation and Militarization in the Philippines, Trends and Analysis 1984, Task Force Detainees et al.)

This repression occurs at the hands of the police, military and paramilitary units, sometimes in cooperation with employers. After raising the issue of human rights abuses with Ministry of Defense officials, the ICFTU mission made the following comment in its 1984 report: "What in general struck the mission was the virtual admission of the close involvement of the military . . . in public affairs, or at least in pursuance of the policies and actions of the Marcos government and its attempt to suppress opposition."

The military and the government justify their actions as necessary to counter "subversion." But rarely are workers afforded a fair and speedy trial to judge the truth of the subversion charges. Instead, the miitary often resorts to extra-judicial measures, such as torture, rape and murder. There are no known cases in which military officers have been prosecuted for these offenses.

In August and September 1982, 69 trade unionists were arrested on subversion charges, including much of the top leadership of the KMU, an opposition union organization. The offices of the KMU and those of four union affiliates were raided and materials, files, and office equipment were confiscated. In April 1983, the KMU filed a formal complaint against the Philippine government with the ILO Committee on Freedom of Association. The Philippine government delayed for more than a year in replying to the complaint, ignoring normal ILO procedure. In its final judgment issued June 1984, the Committee expressed "deep concern at (the) seriousness" of the charges and recommended that the Philippine government take immediate actions, including carrying out prompt and independent trials for the arrested unionists, restoring the confiscated property to the unions, investigating allegations of torture, and reforming its legislation. The Philippine government failed to act on these recommendations. ("Complaint presented by the Kilusang Mayo Uno against the Government of the Philippines, 234th Report of the Committee on Freedom of Association, ILO Governing Body, May 31–June 2, 1984).

The U.S. State Department notes in the Philippine section of its 1984 report on human rights that a dialogue between the government and opposition labor groups on the right to strike did not bring about changes in the law, although the government did issue stricter guidelines. It also notes the incidence of violent clashes between the military and strikers in 1984. Specific accounts of police brutality against striking workers are presented in the following section.

II. THE RIGHT TO ORGANIZE AND COLLECTIVELY BARGAIN

A. Legal restrictions.—ILO Convention 87, as mentioned earlier, establishes the broad principles of the right to organize, including "the right to join federations and to affiliate with international organizations of workers and employees." The Philippines has also ratified ILO Convention 98, the Right to Organize and Collective Bargaining, which extends workers "i) protection against having their employment conditioned on not joining or relinquishing trade union membership, and ii) protection against dismissal or other prejudice because of union membership or participation in union activities."

Because there is no sharp distinction between the right to associate and the right to organize, many of the legal restrictions on the latter have been discussed in the previous section. However, the ILO Committee of Exports has criticized certain provisions of the Philippine Labor Code that specifically relate to the right to organize. In its 1984 report, the Committee of Exports cited section 237(a) as incompatible with ILO standards on the right to organize. Section 237(a) restricts the establishment of federations or national unions to groupings of at least ten unions in the same industry. As Philippine economic professor E.M. Villegas has noted, the intent of this provision is "to insure a more effective overseeing by the government of the labor movement . . . and to control its direction." ("Notes on the Labor Code" by Edberto M. Villegas, The Philippines in the Third World, Paper Series No. 23, June 1980, University of the Philippines.)

Again, the Philippine government has ignored the Committee's judgment and has taken no steps toward legislative reform.

B. Labor relations practice.—Legal protections of the right to organize and bargain collectively have little meaning for Philippine workers since they are rarely enforced.

There exist numerous cases of workers denied employment because of their union sympathies, or dismissed or discriminately treated because of their union activity. According to statistics compiled by the Philippine Ministry of Labor and Employment, 54 percent of strikes in 1984 involved unfair labor practices such as illegal suspension, dismissal, or other punitive actions. In such cases, workers have little or no legal recourse.

The following is just a small sample of incidents in which workers have suffered discrimination due to their union activity. The cases selected refer to industries producing goods imported to the U.S. under the GSP. While official documentation exists for several of the examples, others rely on observations and interviews by visitors to the Philippines.

(1) In May 1984, the workers of InterAsia Container Industries, a corporation located in the Bataan Export Processing Zone which produces cloth sacks for export went on strike over the illegal termination of 11 union officials, and other issues. The picketline was twice brutally attacked by the military. The third time, about a hundred military and zone police forces attacked the picketline manned only by some twenty workers. This led to the first zone-wide strike in the Bataan Export Processing Zone when some 2,000 workers from nearby factories picketed in support of the InterAsia workers. (Philippine Trade Unionism: A Situationer by the Institute for Labor Research and Documentation, Manila, 1985; Philippine Labor Monitor, June 1984, pp. 10-12).

(2) In September 1983, workers at the British-owned Astec Electronics Company, a components manufacturer also in the export zone, won a certification election for a union. Two weeks later, the management laid off several hundred workers. Regarding the layoffs as a form of union-busting, the workers went on strike in early October. The zone police harassed and molested women on the picketline and used tear gas and truncheons to disperse them. In December, Astec management laid off all workers and closed the plant. Many of the strikers were blacklisted and unable to obtain work elsewhere in the zone. (International Commission of Jurists, 1984).

(3) In May 1984, workers at Lotus Corporation, a Korean manufacturer of NIKE shoes, went on strike to protest, among other things, the illegal termination of union leaders, the reshuffling of workers and other union-busting tactics. The workers eventually won many of their demands, but not before two workers were seriously injured when zone police attempted to break their picketline.

(4) In January 1985, nearly a third of the 1,500 workforce at Triumph International were dismissed, including most of the active union supporters. The workers considered the layoff retaliation for their active role in labor alliances and workers rallies and decided to strike. The German-owned company assembles women's underwear for sale to Germany, Japan and the U.S. On strike since January, the workers expect their strike to be declared illegal because the company is an "export-oriented industry." (KMU International Bulletin, March 1985; workers testimony relayed to a U.S. investigator, February 1985.)

(5) Workers at Franklin Baker Corporation, a U.S. subsidiary of General Foods Corporation which processes coconut for export, went on strike on January 1, 1985 to protest the dismissal of several hundred union supporters and the company's failure to pay the minimum wage. The workers experienced increasing harassment by military men and private security guards hired by management. On January 10, 1985, two workers were killed and seven injured when armed men fired at their picketline. Though the Ministry of Labor ordered the company to rehire all workers and pay back wages, the company ignored the order. It now continues operation through the use of scab labor. (Fact-finding Mission on Labor Repression and Militarization, February 21-23, 1985, report).

(6) Job applicants at Texas Instruments, Inc., the U.S.-owned electronics and semiconductor firm which produces for export, must submit to a battery of tests and interviews prior to hiring. The procedure is partially aimed at disclosing the applicant's attitude toward unions and history of union involvement. Applicants are told that Texas Instruments has no unionized plants and does not intend to have unionized plants in the future. Any applicant with union sympathies or union experience is not hired. Texas Instruments reportedly keeps computerized records of test results and shares this information with other companies in the Baguio Export Processing Zone, where the plant is located. (Workers testimony conveyed to a U.S. investigator, March 1985).

IV. A MINIMUM AGE FOR THE EMPLOYMENT OF CHILDREN

A. Legal restrictions.—Under the Philippine Child and Youth Welfare code, children under age 16 may perform light work which is not harmful to them and does not disrupt their education. This age restriction is basically consistent with ILO Convention 138, which sets workers' minimum age at 15 years or completion of compulsory schooling. (Most Filipino children complete compulsory elementary schooling by age 12 or 13.) However, the convention sets at 18 years the minimum age for work "likely to jeopardize the health, safety, and morals of young persons." Thus, on this score, there is a two year discrepancy between Philippine law and the ILO standard.

B. Labor practice.—Philippine government enforcement of child labor laws are at best lax, a fact that the government itself acknowledges. According to a recent study by the Philippine Council for the Welfare of Children, an agency of the Ministry of Social Services and Development, more than 2.8 million, or 18.7 percent of Filipino workers are between ages 10 and 19. The Council claims that young workers are often made to perform the most dangerous tasks, as their age makes them vulnerable to exploitation. The Council also notes the dangers faced by street children engaged as vendors, scavengers, and beggars. (Asia Labor Monitor, May 1984, p. 25). And, with the worsening economic crises, increasing numbers of children are drawn into prostitution.

One industry well known to employ 8- and 10-year-old children as full or part time plantation workers is the sugar industry. (Sugar, incidentally, ranks first in sales among Philippine products imported under the GSP.) These children quit school in order to contribute to the family income. However, they usually receive only several pesos per day, a fraction of the wages received by adult workers. (Personal observation and workers' testimony relayed to a U.S. investigator, March 1985: "Sugar: Honey for a Few" by the National Federation of Sugar Workers, 1984: International Commission of Jurists, 1984.)

V. ACCEPTABLE CONDITIONS OF WORK WITH RESPECT TO MINIMUM WAGES, HOURS OF WORK, AND OCCUPATIONAL SAFETY AND HEALTH

MINIMUM WAGE

A. Legal restrictions.—The most comprehensive of the several ILO conventions regarding minimum wage policies requires that countries consider the "needs of workers and their families, taking into account the general level of wages . . . the cost of living" and "economic factors, including . . . the desirability of attaining and maintaining a high level of employment." The Philippines has ratified only two of the half dozen minimum wage conventions: ILO convention 95, the Protection of Wages, and convention 99, which applies only to agricultural workers. However, Philippine minimum wage laws and policies do not begin to measure up to international standards set by these or other conventions.

The President of the Philippines sets the minimum wage level by means of executive order. During 1984, President Marcos issued three successive wage orders, raising minimum wages 36 percent over the course of the year. However, the cost of living far outstripped workers' earnings. Inflation averaged 55 percent during that same period. The government has not proven responsive to demands from a broad range of opposition groups that workers' wages keep pace with the rate of inflation.

The minimum wage for industrial workers currently stands at 57 pesos per day. But by the government's own estimates, the cost of basic necessities for an average family of six comes to 108 pesos per day. Food costs alone account for 65 pesos. And, with unemployment and underemployment together reaching 42 percent, a Filipino family rarely has more than one minimum wage earning member. Analyses of government income statistics estimate that 59 out of 100 Philippine households live below the poverty threshold. (IBON Facts and Figures, 153, December 31, 1984 and 161, April 30, 1985.) These are far from acceptable wage conditions.

The government's policy of holding wages at levels below inflation is a feature of the economic recovery program agreed to by the International Monetary Fund and the government. For workers and their families, the program means hunger and impoverishment.

B. Labor practice.—Notwithstanding the already substandard minimum wage levels, many workers do not receive even the legal minimum. The government grants exemption from minimum wage orders in a broad range of cases, including "financially distressed" firms, those with less than ten workers and export-oriented firms. Furthermore, many firms that cannot claim such exemptions nevertheless choose to ignore minimum wage laws. Failing enforcement by the government, workers often are pushed to strike for the wages legally owed them.

The government itself has found rampant violations of minimum wage and benefit laws. A 1981 government inspection revealed that 27.7 percent violated minimum wage laws and even greater percentages violated benefit laws. (The Philippine Labor Situation, Selected Statistics 1984 by the Center for Labor Statistics, p. 47) Other estimates range as high as 70 or 90 percent. (IBON Facts and Figures, 161, April 30, 1985; ICFTU Mission Report, 1984.) It appears that while the government recognizes the problem, it lacks either the will or the capability to make its minimum wage laws effective.

The following are several examples of wage violations in export-oriented industries:

(1) In April 1984, the 2,000 workers at Artex Corp. plant went on strike to demand their wages be raised by 19 pesos per day to bring them up to the legal minimum wage. Artex is a Chinese-Philippine company which manufactures plastic shoes for export. Soon after it began, the strike sparked widespread violence when the military attacked not only the striking workers but also the nearby slum community. As of February, 1985, the strike continues and the violence against the strikers has not been investigated. (WHO Magazine, July 25, 1984; Business Day, February 27, 1985).

(2) As mentioned earlier, the 1,400 workers of Franklin Baker Corporation, a U.S.-owned company which processes coconut for export, struck on January 1, 1985 after management refused to implement three separate wage orders at the time they were issued. Though two workers were killed and seven injured on the picketline, management still refuses to meet the workers' demands. (Report of fact-finding mission to Franklin Baker, March 1985)

(3) Although the legal minimum wage for agricultural plantation workers stands at 32 pesos per day, almost no sugar worker receives more than 28 pesos per day. (Far Eastern Economic Review, 18 April 1985) These exploitative conditions are made even worse by plantation owners' practice of hiring laborers at a "piece-rate" of 10 to 15 pesos per day. Efforts by workers to demand their rights are met with military harassment and violence. The present collapse of the Philippine sugar industry means unemployment for 200,000 to 300,000 sugar workers, who have no safety net to protect them. (International Commission on Jurists, 1984)

HOURS OF WORK

A. Legal restrictions.—The Philippine labor code specifies that, in accordance with ILO standards, workers are required to work only eight hours a day or 48 hours a week.

B. Labor relations practice.—There are occasional cases in which employers force their workers to work unreasonable numbers of hours overtime. This appears to occur primarily in export-oriented firms, where employers accumulate excess stock of finished goods through forced overtime, then lay off workers for short durations of time. This way, an employer avoids paying certain fixed daily benefits on those days employees do not work.

A recent survey conducted by the government Institute of Labor and Manpower Studies shows that 27 percent of businesses polled failed to pay the legally required premium for overtime work. ("Most Metro firms breaking labor laws—MOLE survey" Malaya, January 23, 1985.)

An investigator from the American Friends Service Committee discovered in 1976 that forced overtime was common among firms in the Bataan Export Processing Zone. A worker told her that "textile workers at Intercon (a Taiwanese-Filipino oufit) were worked overtime so much that a lot of them simply collapsed. Some of them also vomited . . . This is partly because they were not getting enough sleep, they had to work overtime." ("Rough Notes on a Visit to the Philippines, Feb. 20-Mar. 6, 1976" by Le Anh Tu).

In a comprehensive study of the Bataan Export Processing Zone in 1982, the Ministry of Labor found that forced overtime remained a chronic problem for zone workers. The study recommended dialogue between management and unions on this and other issues. But forced overtime continues today. Zone workers told a recent visitor to the Philippines that certain companies regularly force workers to work two to four hours overtime each day, and occasionally up to six or eight hours. Pregnant women or sick workers receive no special exemptions. (The Bataan Export Processing Zone, Ministry of Labor and Employment, 1982; workers' testimony relayed to a U.S. investigator, February 1985; Asia Labour Monitor, May 1984, p. 24).

OCCUPATIONAL SAFETY AND HEALTH

A. Legal restrictions.—ILO Standards on occupational safety and health are fragmented and noncomprehensive. Philippine law is even more so. Few legal measures protect workers from hazardous working conditions. The Philippine Labor Minister himself said that the Philippine labor code should be expanded to allow strikes over health and safety conditions on the job. Under the present code, workers can only legally strike over deadlocked collective bargaining negotiations and unfair labor practice. The minister was also quoted saying that the enforcement of labor standards is "an area of gross neglect." (Asia Labour Monitor, May 1984, pp. 24-25).

B. Labor relations practice.—The 1982 Philippine government study on the Bataan Export Processing Zone documents poor safety and health conditions in companies throughout the zone. It notes that work-related illnesses are "fairly common" in the zone: eye-irriation and hypertension in the electronics industry; conjunctivitis in plastics and metal fabrication; upper respiratory throat infections in garments and food industries; and sinusitis in footwear and leather industries. More recently, zone workers complained to a U.S. investigator of inadequate toilet facilities, insufficient safety devices or protective clothing, and a lack of the on-site medical personnel guaranteed by law. Aside from the illnesses already mentioned, many zone workers suffer from regular bouts of influenza and anemia and a few have contracted serious illnesses such as tuberculosis.

The following passage, excerpted from testimony by a former Filipino worker and union leader before the Permanent People's Tribunal Session on the Philippines, give a personal account of health conditions inside Philippine factories:

"Many of us were not paid our rightful sick leave benefit and we were even charged with being awol because we couldn't present such a certificate. But we couldn't present such a certificate for the simple reason that we couldn't afford to have ourselves examined by a doctor. Besides, those who did have such a certificate were still not accepted by the company doctor who wanted us to go exclusively to his clinic. But that would have meant additional expenses in exchange for superficial treatment, often just aspirin, no matter how serious our illness was.

Oftentime the doctor wouldn't authorize our going home even if we suffered from fever or over-fatigue in the middle of our shift. We had to finish the shift . . .

In labor-intensive companies the conditions are worse. Most garment workers complain of heat exhaustion. Fainting and dizziness are common among workers in Triumph International, a foreign-owned firm making brassieres. At Gelmart, a dress and glove firm owned by an American, a worker said: "The factory is very hot. Because of the suddent change in temperature when we go out, our bodies are prone to sickness." It was also in this factory that fire broke out and killed 11 workers, with 53 other injured."

(Testimony of Antonio de la Cruz in "Philippines: Repression and Resistance," Komite ng Sambayanang Pilipino, London, 1981).

CONCLUSIONS

In conclusion, the Philippine government is found in blatant violation of four of the five labor standards enumerated in the new GSP law. Indeed, conditions in each of these four areas are getting worse, not better.

The first three of these conditions: the right to association, the right to organize, and minimum age, are agreed to by the U.S. government to be among the inalienable rights of workers everywhere, no matter the level of development. The final condition, that in relation to conditions of work, is obviously related to the level of development of a country. In this realm, however, there can be no defense of Philippine conditions, which in many cases approach subhuman levels.

In the face of these conditions, what action should the U.S. government take? The U.S. government often complains of unfair trade subsidies by foreign governments that give their goods unfair advantages in world markets. Labor repression of the magnitude practiced in the Philippines can only be judged as the most blatant form of unfair trade subsidy available. They are an affront to the rights and dignity of working people in the Philippines and in all other countries.

Therefore, in accordance with U.S. law, we recommend that GSP benefits be discontinued for the Philippines until there is a fundamental improvement in labor conditions.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, whatever time I have remaining, I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING].

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman has done a real service to the country and the Congress by laying this all out.

One of the things that impressed me as I was listening to this tragic litany was that the Third World countries are going through all the throes that the now advanced countries went through in the early days of the industrial revolution in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. They are being exploited in the very same manner and because they have not yet developed strong unions and laws to protect labor, we in this country are being brought down and have had our enlightenment and reforms reversed because of competition from these preenlightened era industrial conditions.

I would remind our colleagues that it was those very conditions that gave rise to Karl Marx and the Communist manifesto which ultimately produced communism.

I think we all would agree that the conditions in Communist countries are just as bad as some of those that were described here; but the point is that we have an obligation to insist that either foreign manufacturers conform to minimal standards, minimal decent standards of labor and wages, or else they should not be permitted to enter this country. I think that is the way to accelerate the experience that we as an advanced country went through and bring enlightened practices to the Third World countries, so we all can compete on the same level as the gentleman has suggested.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the gentleman for this exercise in laying out these facts for all to see.

□ 1625

Mr. PEASE. I thank the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING] for his support on this matter and so many others that involve enlightened governmental policy. He is a very valuable Member of Congress and I am delighted to have him in the neighboring district to my own.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I commend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE] for taking out this special order today on the subject of international labor rights. I am pleased to join with him in calling attention to the status of laboring men and women around the world, and the urgent need for international action against those countries that engage in labor rights violations.

As many of my colleagues know, I have joined with the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF] to sponsor H.R. 3599, a bill to suspend temporarily for 6 months the most-favored-nation treatment accorded to Romania. Our bill is a response to that nation's abusive internal practices, particularly its repression of religion. During the 6-month suspension of most-favored-nation status, the President would be directed to assess the status of civil liberties and human rights in Romania.

In the course of my study of human rights in Romania, it has come to my attention that labor rights are denied to Romanian workers. In testimony submitted to the U.S. Trade Representative, AFL-CIO stated:

Fundamental worker rights are denied and those who seek to exercise such rights are brutally suppressed. Free trade union advocates languish in jails. Labor is compulsory, as statutes provide for punishment of those who choose not to work or are unemployed. Prisoners of conscience, including advocates of free trade unions are sentenced to forced labor.

This report went on to conclude:

Recent years have seen no improvement in the status of workers rights in Romania. there is no evidence that the country has, in the words of the law, taken steps to afford internationally recognized workers rights to workers in that country.

Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of my colleagues, the full text of the statement prepared for the U.S. Trade Representative on June 24, 1985, by Eugenia Kemble of AFL-CIO follows:

ROMANIA

By any standard—be it existing legislation, the public utterances of government and Communist Party authorities, or government actions—Romania qualifies as among the worst offenders of the fundamental worker rights of freedom of association and the right to organize (ILO Convention No. 87), the right to bargain collectively (ILO Convention No. 98), and protection from compulsory and forced labor (ILO Conventions No. 29 and No. 105).

Although Article 27 of the Romanian Constitution provides for the right to associate in trade unions, Article 7 of the Constitution restricts the independence of such associations by establishing that the "leading political force in society is the Romanian Communist Party." Moreover, the Labor Code of Romania states in Section 164 that "unions are occupational organizations set up in virtue of the right of association laid down in the Constitution and operating on the basis of the bylaws of the General Trade of the Union Confederation, the federations for the different branches of activity, and the trade union organizations in the [economic] units." This section of the Labor Code, therefore, asserts that the officially enshrined General Trade Union Confederation's bylaws are the sole legitimate basis for all trade union activity.

A 1981 Report of the International Labor Organization's Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations concluded that the Romanian Labor Code and Constitution restrict the right of workers to form organizations of their own choosing. In the view of the ILO, Romanian law establishes such a close link between the union and the Communist Party, that it is impossible for labor organizations to form or operate independently. During its 1984 deliberations, the ILO Committee of Experts once again criticized the restrictions on the freedom of Romanian unions to determine their constitution, activities or programs. It asserted that official Romanian unions are used mainly to "mobilize the masses for the accomplishment of the party program and policy."

Perhaps the best practical test of the right to freedom of association and organizing occurred in 1979 when the Free Trade Union of Workers in Romania, SLOMR, was launched by 20 workers and intellectuals.

A legitimate trade union grouping, SLOMR, based its activities on the Convenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, signed by the Romanian government in 1974. The union's support grew to at least 2,000 workers.

But the Romanian authorities moved rapidly to suppress the fledgling free labor movement:

By April 1979, 15 SLOMR workers were given prison sentences of three to six months under Decree No. 153 prohibiting "parasitism".

Eugen Onescu and several other workers were interned in psychiatric hospitals.

Founder Dr. Ionel Cana, a physician, was sentenced to 5½ years of prison for "conspiracy and anti-government propaganda". Cana was eventually amnestied, but his request to emigrate has not been granted.

Co-founder Gheorge Brasoveanu, an economist, was arrested in March 1979, first confined to a psychiatric hospital, then imprisoned until November 1980. His request to emigrate has not been granted.

Nicolae Dascalu, another co-founder, was sentenced to 18 months of prison (reduced to 10 upon appeal) for violating a press law prohibiting the dissemination of information abroad without legal authorization. Dascalu was allowed to emigrate to the United States in 1981.

G. Grigoras was imprisoned for six months for "inciting an anarchic and parasitic group".

Vasile Paraschiv, a chemical worker from Ploesti, was detained and beaten in Bucharest in February 1979 for his support of SLOMR. Paraschiv had previously been interned three times in psychiatric hospitals for political reasons. In 1978 he had spent six months in France, where he held press conferences about his experiences of psychiatric abuse. After the break-up of SLOMR, Paraschiv disappeared for some time, and when he was seen in 1982, he appeared to have been the victim of police brutality. He and his wife are seeking an exit visa.

Carmen Popescu, 40, mother of a teenaged daughter and another co-founder of SLOMR, was imprisoned and released, then re-arrested in 1981 and sentenced to six years of imprisonment. She is still in prison and is in bad health.

Virgil Chender, a worker from Sighisoara, went to Bucharest in March 1979 to submit a collective statement of support for SLOMR from 1,487 workers in Tirgu-Mures. He was apprehended and is still missing.

The U.S. Department of State's Country Reports on Human Rights Practices for 1984 provides a concise description of freedom of association in Romania:

"Free trade unions are not permitted. Membership in government-controlled unions is mandatory for workers in every economic sector . . . New government laws and regulations are read to the membership [at union meetings] generally without discussion, and highlights or recent political happenings are brought up. Topics such as wages, reduction of the workweek, and additional holidays are not discussed."

Provisions concerning compulsory or forced labor also are part of Romania's everyday reality. Article 5 of the Constitution, which describes work not simply as a right but as a "duty of honor," contains within it a clear element of compulsion. "Parasitism" laws make it a crime for Romanians to be idle or unemployed. Article 18 of the Constitution, which guarantees the right to work, says nothing about the workers' right to choice of work. In addition, the Constitution does not provide for freedom of movement or choice of residence. According to the State Department Country Reports on Human Rights Practices for 1984 in Romania "the right of a citizen to change place of residence is extremely restricted."

Furthermore, Romanian law violates forced labor conventions. In 1973, for example, Law 3 for the Penal Code provided for "corrective labor without loss of liberty" as an alternative to imprisonment.

In conclusion, Romania is a closed society organized according to the tenets of totalitarianism, with every institution dominated by the party-state apparatus. Fundamental worker rights are denied and those who seek to exercise such rights are brutally suppressed. Free trade union advocates languish in jails. Labor is compulsory, as statutes provide for punishment of those who choose not to work or are unemployed. Prisoners of conscience, including advocates of free trade unions are sentenced to forced labor.

Recent years have seen no improvement in the status of workers rights in Romania. There is no evidence that the country has, in the words of the law, taken steps to afford internationally recognized workers rights to workers in that country.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have permission to extend their remarks on the subject of this special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H.R. Res. 465) "Joint resolution making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1986, and for other purposes."

The message also announced, that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3384) "An act to amend title 5, United States Code, to expand the class of individuals eligible for refunds or other returns of contributions from contingency reserves in the Employees Health Benefits Fund; to make miscellaneous amendments relating to the Civil Service Retirement System and the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program; and for other purposes."

TEMPORARY EXTENSION OF CERTAIN PROGRAMS RELATING TO HOUSING AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT

Mr. ST GERMAIN. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution, (H.J. Res. 495) to provide for the temporary extension of certain programs relating to housing and community development, and for other purposes and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I do not intend to object—I yield to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs to explain the procedure.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, House Joint Resolution 495 would extend the following programs to March 17, 1986: The Federal Housing Administration's mortgage insurance programs; the section 312 rehabilitation loan program; the Farmers Home rural housing authorities; the flood and crime insurance programs; the community development block grant entitlements; the section 202 interest rate limitation; and the Home Mortgage Disclosure Act.

Mr. Speaker, the conferees have been unable to resolve the housing authorization issues in the context of the reconciliation bill and this temporary extender is needed to keep these important programs alive until we have an opportunity to review them early in the next session.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, what this does, as the chairman suggested, is simply extend the FHA authority, which expired last Sunday night, along with the Crime Insurance and the Flood Insurance Program, to March 17 of next year.

The exact same language is contained in the budget reconciliation bill which will be considered here later on, but in an abundance of precaution we felt we needed to pass House Joint Resolution 495 now. Of primary importance in the resolution, it does not contain any changes at all in the Housing Program. This is not H.R. 1. The housing bill will be considered next year under regular order. I regret that we were not able to put an FHA adjustable rate mortgage cap higher than the 10 percent, but what it is now is, it is a simple extension. We do need to extend it at this point in time. I would point out that it is a temporary extension. I respectfully agree with the chairman that we need it, and I urge adoption of the resolution.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WYLIE. Under my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I appreciate the gentleman's explanation.

If I understand correctly, none of the language of H.R. 1 is contained in this particular bill, and am I also to understand that this is not a bill now that will become a vehicle for the advancement of H.R. 1?

Mr. WYLIE. The gentleman's understanding is absolutely correct. There is no language from H.R. 1 in here. It will not become a vehicle. It is a simple extender. We really will not need to pass this if the budget reconciliation bill is passed.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman will yield further, am I correct, though, that the H.R. 1 language has been dropped out of the reconciliation bill, as well?

Mr. WYLIE. That is correct.

Mr. WALKER. So what we are going to have, whether we pass reconciliation or if we go the route of this resolution, is a simple extension of those programs presently in place under the current policy rules.

Mr. WYLIE. That is correct. The gentleman could not be more correct.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WYLIE. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WYLIE. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I just have a colloquy to engage in with the distinguished chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. ST GERMAIN].

The bill extends the Federal Crime Insurance Program through March 17, 1986. Am I right that this extension operates to suspend the effective date of the paragraph of Public Law No. 99-160 (fiscal year 1986 HUD and Independent Agencies appropriations act) concerning a one-time payment from the National Insurance Development Fund to States participating in the Federal Crime Insurance Program?

Mr. ST GERMAIN. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman from New York is absolutely correct.

Mr. SCHUMER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the resolution, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the joint resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

SALUTE TO THE FIGHTIN' TEXAS AGGIES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, we have been considering several very serious subjects on this floor today and this week. We have considered tax reform, we have considered budget reconciliation, we have considered the farm bill, and a continuing resolution to keep the Government in operation. There is a subject down in my State of Texas that many people consider to be just as serious. That subject is football, and in particular Southwest Conference football.

The Southwest Conference is a conference that has a long and storied tradition, a long and storied history of providing excellent teams at the collegiate level of athletic competition. This year the champion of the Southwest Conference happens to be the Fightin' Texas Aggies, a school that I attended from 1968 to 1972, and a school that is in my congressional district.

This championship team, coached by head coach Jackie Sherrill, is the 13th Southwest Conference championship team from Texas A&M. It is their first championship team since 1975, when they shared the championship with the University of Texas and the University of Arkansas.

The 1985 Fightin' Texas Aggies won the championship in many ways. Obviously, they won it in the standings by winning seven games and losing only one game in conference play, that game to the Baylor Bears, coached by head coach Grant Taft. Their overall record was an outstanding nine wins and two losses. They also won it in many of the categories that the Southwest Conference keeps statistics in.

The 1985 Fightin' Texas Aggies were first in offense, averaging over 400 yards per game. They were first in defense, holding opponents under 285 yards per game. They were first in scoring offense as they scored over 30 points a game. They were led by several All-Southwest Conference players, on offense by their All-Southwest Conference quarterback, Kevin Murray; on defense by their All-American linebacker, Johnny Holland. Johnny Holland, is Texas A&M's 24th All-American since the school began playing intercollegiate athletics.

There are many other players, I think, worthy of mention on this team. On offense, they have All-Southwest Conference tackle Doug Williams; All-Southwest Conference center Randy Dausin; All-Southwest Conference running back Anthony Toney, All-Southwest Conference Jeff Nelson, who set a new career reception record for Texas A&M by catching 92 passes in his career; and fullback Roger Vick.

On defense they have such stalwarts as Jay Mueller, defensive tackle, who is from Conroe, TX; Rod Saddler from Georgia; Todd Howard, All-Southwest Conference defensive back Domingo Bryant, Darrel Austin, Kip Corrington, and nose guard Sammy O'Brient.

It is a very good team. They are going to be in the 50th annual Cotton Bowl. This will be the fourth time that Texas A&M has played in the Cotton Bowl. The last time was in 1968 when a team coached by Gene Stallings beat a Bear Bryant team from Alabama 20 to 16. That team back in 1968 had such players as All-American Edd Hargett; All-American Bob Long, Tommy Maxwell, Rolf Krueger, Bill Hobbs, Grady Allen, who was a captain, Larry Stegent, Steve O'Neil who later played for the New York Jets, Dan Schneider, who was a captain, and Robert Cortez, who was also a captain.

I would hope that as the current edition of the A&M team prepares for the Cotton Bowl on January 1, 1986, where they are going to play the Auburn Tigers, another fine team from Alabama headed by Heisman Trophy winner Bo Jackson, that the people in the country would focus on that game and hopefully many of the people in this Chamber will find the time to come to Dallas, TX, and participate with me and thousands of other Aggies in the festivities. I am sure it will be a good game. I am planning to be there. I hope that the result on January 1 turns out like it did back in 1968 where A&M beat another fine Alabama team; that this year we will defeat the Auburn Tigers in a contest of good, clean sportsmanship and athletic ability.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. FIELDS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, as a trustee of Baylor University, of the Fighting Baylor Bears, I would like to congratulate the gentleman's alma mater, Texas A&M.

I was present when the Texas Aggies played the Texas Longhorns, and not only saw the famed 12th man, but saw the 13th, 14th, and 15th man in the stadium in way of the fans, and I want to congratulate the gentleman. I know he mentioned the Baylor Bears a while ago. We were honored that we had the opportunity to play Texas A&M this year and were successful on the field, and now we say congratulations and good luck.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRIES

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, it has been my understanding that as of last year the ruling of the Chair is that while we are proceeding on special orders that the entire Chamber of the House is to be shown at intervals while we are in the process of proceeding with those special orders.

It is my understanding that during the special orders that have taken place both yesterday and today, that particular ruling of the Chair has not been followed.

Can the Chair inform us whether or not this is another instance where we have changed the rules without informing the membership of the change, or just why it is that under these circumstances the special orders evidently have not followed the procedures of the Chair with regard to the television cameras?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE). The Chair is not aware of any change in the Speaker's guidelines. I suppose the gentleman could address his comments to those who originally made that decision, but the Chair is not aware of any change in the application of the guidelines.

The Chair did announce that the House has not yet completed legislative business for the day and would return to legislative business.

Mr. WALKER. A further parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

It is my understanding that the ruling of the Chair related to the time spent on special orders. I am not aware that it had any provision in it that if those special orders come before legislative business has been completed that at that point the cameras would not sweep the Chamber. My understanding was that once we go onto special orders that the cameras are supposed to be sweeping the entire House. That has not been happening.

The only thing I can assume is that we have had a change in policy that has taken place. If I understand the Chair correctly, there has been no change in policy, so then my question is: Why are the rules not being followed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk's interpretation of that change was that that was to be done after legislative business had been completed. The cameras have never panned the House until that time. The Speaker's guidelines provide that until such time as all legislative business has been completed with a crawl on the screen so indicating the cameras will not pan the House, and legislative business has not yet been completed today.

Mr. WALKER. A further parliamentary inquiry. It seems to me that that is a different interpretation from anything that the Members have ever been informed of, and that indeed, then, it sounds to me as though we are making another one of these changes that takes place without any information coming to the minority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will respond again.

This has been the practice, and the last 2 days have not been different than prior practice. Prior practice has been that at the end of legislative business when the House proceeds on special orders, the camera will pan the entire House.

The House has not completed legislative business today, nor had it yesterday.

Mr. WALKER. A further parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

Then why, last Wednesday, when we had a similar circumstance on a special order that was taking place prior to legislative business being completed, that the Chamber was being swept? Am I to understand at that point, then, that the rules were not being obeyed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there has been inconsistency, it has not been intentional and the Chair will look into that.

Mr. WALKER. A further parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

Can we now, then, have a definitive statement of just what the policy is with regard to panning the Chamber during the time that special orders are under way?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will refer the response to that question that the gentleman just asked again to the Speaker and not the Speaker pro tempore.

□ 1635

Mr. WALKER. A further parliamentary inquiry: Are we going to have a definitive statement made on that prior to the close of business today?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will look into the matter and raise the gentleman's question with the Speaker.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the Chair.

CORRECTING ENROLLMENT OF H.R. 2100, FOOD SECURITY ACT OF 1985

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 264), to correct the enrollment of H.R. 2100, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the concurrent resolution.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 264

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill H.R. 2100, to extend and revise agricultural price support and related programs, to provide for agricultural export, resource conservation, farm credit, and agricultural research and related programs, to continue food stamp assistance to low income persons, to ensure consumers an abundance of food and fiber at reasonable prices, and for other purposes, the Clerk of the House shall make the following corrections:

In title XIII, after section 1304 insert the following section:

INTEREST RATES—WATER AND WASTE DISPOSAL FACILITY AND COMMUNITY FACILITY LOANS

SEC. 1304A. Section 307(a)(3)(A) of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1927(a)(3)(A)) is amended by—

(1) striking out "where the median family income of the persons to be served by such facility is below the poverty line prescribed by the Office of Management and Budget, as adjusted under section 624 of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2971d)" and inserting in lieu thereof "where the median household income of the persons to be served by such facility is below the higher of 80 per centum of the statewide nonmetropolitan median household income or the poverty line established by the Office of Management and Budget, as revised under section 673(2) of the Community Services Block Grant Act (42 U.S.C. 9902(2))"; and

(2) inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: "; and not in excess of 7 per centum per annum on loans for such facilities that do not qualify for the 5 per centum per annum interest rate but are located in areas where the median household income of the persons to be served by the facility does not exceed 100 per centum of the statewide nonmetropolitan median household income".

Amend the table of contents in section 2 of bill accordingly.

Mr. DE LA GARZA (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the concurrent resolution be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman from Texas if he would explain to the House what it is we are doing in this legislation?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to explain to the gentleman.

When the conference report on the farm bill was finalized, inadvertently two sections were left out by the staff, and this is to allow the enrolling clerk to insert the two sections that had been left out.

Mr. WALKER. If I understand the gentleman, we had a bill out earlier today to correct legislation that had been incorrectly enrolled. This is another bill to simply correct legislation that was previously incorrectly enrolled; is that my understanding?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Technically, no. It was not incorrectly enrolled, but the mistake was ours. The copy that we gave to the Speaker had two sections that had been left out, and this is to allow them to insert them.

There are two sections in the credit section that were identical in the House bill and the Senate bill. The staff left them out, one thinking that the other had taken care of that.

Mr. WALKER. But we are making no substantive changes of legislation beyond which the House approved?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. None whatsoever. And it has been cleared with the minority. As always, my ranking member and I work closely together, and there is never any activity that is not in concurrence with both sides.

Mr. WALKER. I know the gentleman is very good about that, and I appreciate his explanation.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MILITARY AIRCRAFT CHARTERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of Christmas, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GONZALEZ. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the gentleman, because he has fought so hard for all of his constituents, to please add to his family's prayers over the holidays our four Americans, one of them a Catholic priest, one of them a newspaperman, and two of them educators, administrators in the hospital and agricultural sections of the American University of Beirut. These four Americans, unless we get a big change in luck here, will be in Beirut during these holidays while we all enjoy our loved ones. So I hope they have your prayers. I know they do.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I want to thank the gentleman from California and to accede to that request and certainly join him in my prayers as I have been ever since I have raised the issue of captives, not only in Lebanon, but elsewhere. And I do think that this is the time to certainly, of course, never to forget that we have Americans that are in captivity, and particularly these the gentleman refers to.

Mr. DORNAN of California. And quite possibly alive in Southeast Asia. I believe they are. I cannot state it definitively.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Every bit of information that has been adducible, including the Anglican ministerial messenger of the Archbishop of Canterbury——

Mr. DORNAN of California. Terry Waite.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Yes, indicates that they are still alive.

Mr. DORNAN of California. I thank you, sir.

Mr. GONZALEZ. All of us, of course, are anxious to finish the business of this session. I certainly realize that. I am sure everybody else does.

I also realize that the House earlier this week rejected a conference agreement on the continuing resolution which has since been accepted.

I would have offered, if the rule under which the conference on the continuing resolution on appropriations had afforded it, a motion to recommit so that we would not go home without definitely changing the policy that directly needs change, that is accountable and directly, on the cause of, the result of 248 of our soldiers, plus a number of civilian pilots and aircraft attendants in Gander, Newfoundland.

Also, last night, I sent a telegram to the White House, to the President. That telegram reads as follows:

[Mailgram]

WASHINGTON, DC,
December 18, 1985.

This is a confirmation copy of the following message:

President RONALD REAGAN,
White House.

HON. RONALD REAGAN: Know you mourn loss of 248 soldiers but not enough to mourn. Can honor them by long last taking commercial profit out of military functions. Urge you mandate DOD utilize military aircraft transport troops platoon size up.

Transfer $450 million from executive discretionary funds to DOD insures implementation of mandate. Am seeking congressional appropriation reimburse executive fund.

HENRY GONZALEZ,
Member of Congress,
20th District, Texas.

That was why I intended to ask for a recommittal motion with instructions to the conferees, to place that sum in the telegram, to reimburse the President in case he should mandate, or in the event he would not but the Congress mandate such a sum. I believe we need to take action in order to protect the lives of servicemen who are today flying on commercially chartered aircraft, including, notwithstanding the distinguished gentleman and neighbor of mine from the great State of Alabama, the ranking minority member of the Committee on Armed Services, who earlier in a dialog with me stated that he had personally called to make sure the Arrow Transportation Co., based in Florida, would not be. But he was talking about what the commander of these forces known as the multinational peacekeeping forces in the Sinai ordered as of day before yesterday, and that was that no further movement of his contingent would be made by means of Arrow.

But the Arrow Airline has at least three other military contracts because that is what its whole life is, contracts with the military for transportation of troops. So I do not understand, and there is no information to confirm that Arrow has been deprived of transporting other troops in other areas from one point to the other. And even if that were done, the basic issue is changing the policy which, incidentally, remained true all during Vietnam, and also aroused my protest that I directed to then-President Johnson and subsequently to President Nixon, and in both instances, I was replied to just like the gentleman from Alabama replied, that there was no money, what did I want. Did I want these men to be lying down in the empty, chairless bottoms of C-130's?

Well, I had rather have them alive, even lying down in a C-130 than brought back in a coffin, because that is the only time we use military transportation, that is to bring our dead on military aircraft.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GONZALEZ. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman yielding. I was in my office and, on hearing the gentleman on his special order, I wanted to come over and commend him for the extraordinary effort he is making in focusing on this question.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HENRY. I wanted to advise Members of the House that it got only very minimal attention on the wires, but in my district in Grand Rapids, MI, the very craft that was involved in this very serious tragedy was chartered by the military from the Kent County International Airport ferrying troops, reserve troops in this case, and had to abort takeoff because of mechanical difficulties in the plane.

After aborting the takeoff, it did the rather unusual thing of ferrying all of the troops to the front rows of the airplane so that the airplane was physically able to lift off.

Mr. GONZALEZ. That is incredible.

Mr. HENRY. And at this point, we have questions as to whether or not appropriate reports were filed or not, either in terms of the military or in terms of the proper Federal civilian agencies. I just wanted to advise the gentleman and my fellow Members that I have forwarded this information to the Department of Defense, to the Armed Services Committee, the Energy and Commerce Committee, and any other committee that may have appropriate jurisdiction.

Clearly, not only has this particular charter airline had problems in the past, but the particular craft involved in this incident has a rather suspicious record.

I commend the gentleman and thank him for yielding.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I thank the gentleman very much and wish to say that I place myself at his disposal in any way that I can be helpful to him in his efforts to bring these things to the attention of the Defense Department and others. I do not know that I can add much to the gentleman, but certainly he can call on me anytime. I thank him because this is a very fundamental issue that should have been addressed years and years ago. I am sorry that I was not formidable enough to succeed. I tried; the record will so show. But now I think it is inescapable that we address it.

The idea that we would transport battalion-sized troop movements in nameless commercial aircraft that have no real viable standards of safety, upkeep, or maintenance, an aircraft company, for instance, that could not retain pilots because the pilots have refused to stay once they were hired, once they saw the faculty aircraft they were compelled to try to man. I believe that when troop units are being moved for any military purpose, that they should be moved on Government military aircraft, not noname charter lines.

My motion simply would have instructed the conferees to reprogram the $450 million that today is used to pay for such charters. The Defense Department told me this week that they were using $450 million a year for this purpose.

The ranking minority member of the Armed Services Committee said earlier in the dialog I had with him that there was no money. It seems to me inconceivable that they would be passing this resolution, which it itself, I think, is almost perverse in its priority, where we are going to give 3 months of additional housing allowance to the dead; that is, the relatives of the dead.

Well, now, what great generosity. I introduced a bill before, and I reintroduced it after the death of the 241 marines in Beirut, which would have provided $50,000, like an insurance, such as we had in World War II, except that the figure then was $10,000, and I am allowing for inflation; $50,000, and I was denounced by some and was criticized by others, and I could never even get a committee hearing on that proposal.

But here we are thinking we are generous on Christmas Eve by saying to the poor surviving dependents of these 248 soldiers, "Well, we're going to give you 3 months of housing allowance over and above the period that it should have expired."

Now, if one of us dies, in the Congress, our spouses are entitled to 1 year's full pay, right off the bat. I just think that we have got to come back to basics. We have got to come back to fundamentals. And that is what? Looking out for the interests of our own first and foremost, and not indulge in these terrible splurges of false economy.

After all, we have MAC, the Military Airlift Command. There is no reason why MAC cannot perform this job; and we have every reason why it should do so.

Arrow Air Lines and others take it apparently that their sole business for existing is to exclusively acquire military transportation contracts. I know that these so-called supplemental carriers; that is the sophisticated word officialdom gives them, have for decades been used to ferry around military freight of all kinds, so that if the soldier comes back in the form of ashes in a coffin or a body in a coffin, then it is military freight, and he is allowed to be transported back to our country in a military craft.

But if he is alive and kicking, then we transport him in these flimsy, dangerous craft to some zone or mission area that we have mandated our military to participate in, at great danger, and yet in missions that are vaguely defined if defined at all.

For instance, the basic question here, I think should be—two basic questions. One, this method of transportation and the other, and I think just as important corollary question is, what was the mission of these 248? That represents about 25 percent; a little bit, perhaps a little bit more of the total American contingent in the Sinai.

Now, another misconception was revealed by the statement made by my distinguished colleague from Alabama earlier when he said that this was a U.N. matter. That is certainly really exaggerating the situation.

The whole peacekeeping unit in the Sinai was an initiation first brought forth in a letter from President Carter to the Egyptian leader then and the Israeli leader then after the Camp David agreement.

Now, the Camp David agreement has as party signatories Israel and Egypt, not the United States. President Carter wrote that letter in order to try to ensure that there would be some attempt to help both countries ensure the peace; but it called for military, armed.

So that the Congress, on December 12th or thereabouts, 1981; at least that is when the debate took place here, if such it was a debate, mandated for the first time in its history, the deployment of a military unit, not to exceed 2,000.

Never has that been done before. This is why I am taking the floor, because this is not a Presidential command. The Commander-in-Chief did not do this; he requested it, it is true, but it was the Congress that for the first time in its history since 1789, mandated the deployment of American soldiers.

Now, what is their mission? Well, the United States cannot win under any circumstances, because the mission is to be peacekeepers between whom? Two up to now friendly allies that we have. So that if ever that mission is called upon to be carried out, we will be offending one of the two allies.

But if they are military, they are not diplomats, they are not politicians, they are warriors; they are battle-equipped, but not fully. So that if they come under attack by anybody, they are not in a position to militarily defend themselves. They have no cannon, no artillery, they have no aircraft; so what are they going to do? What are we going to do?

So for several months, I have pleaded with the Members of the Congress that have leadership responsibilities to conduct reviews of these forces which, incidentally, would have included everything: Who was handling what in the transportation area; under what circumstances were soldiers being transported? But never has the Congress wanted to do that since the unit was formed sometime after December 1981.

What does the force consist of? We never have persuaded our major allies. For instance, West Germany does not have any; France and England have a handful, maybe a dozen or so; we have 500 Colombians, we have 500 Figi Islanders, and that is about it.

So we have about some 1,500 to 1,800, depending on when you take the count, of American soldiers in an increasingly hostile environment, because ever since the terrible crimes of the hijacking of the Italian ship, our diverting the Egyptian airliner, tensions have arisen among the Egyptian population that tend to be very severely anti-American.

So, what concerned me was what I addressed this House, will not repeat it now, in September. When I did, I was surprised at the number of my colleagues who said, "I did not even know we had troops in the Sinai." So that today it seems to me that we should not quit.

The 75 to 80 percent of the remainder of Americans are still out in that desert, as we break, hurry off to a nice and I hope joyful and I hope healthy and I hope very happy Christmas, dinners and all, we must never forget that these Americans are there, and they are under the shadow of death. And further than that, should anything happen in the way of violence there, we, that is the lawmaking as well as the executive branch, will have immediate questions to address.

How far are we willing to go to defend those men, if they are imperiled, or any component? Suppose the Figi component is attacked; are we going to leave them there or are we going to go to their rescue? And how far will we go?

Suppose that Egypt accuses Israel for breaching Camp David or otherwise Israel accuses Egypt, Egypt accuses Israel. Or, that through intelligence, this group discovers that there is a buildup on either side. If either side moves, what do we do? What does this group do? Well, we know that the U.N. peacekeeping troops, a similar group in Lebanon, once Israel moved in militarily, had to step aside. It could not confront the Israel armor; it was not equipped and it could not have, anyway.

What I am saying is, Mr. Speaker, we cannot depart here, I hope, and I hope that if we do that the President will take cognizance of this and show how we can honor these dead by seeing to it that the reason for their death is removed in any future undertaking that will risk the lives of our military.

The troop transportation done by these charter carriers is not competitive with scheduled airlines. It is commercial carriage only in the sense that a company can be created to do this kind of business exclusively. And it is a shameful thing we have thus allowed troop transportation to become an enterprise to be carried out by companies formed solely for that purpose and then call this a commercial enterprise. If the national purpose if served by patrols in the Sinai, let that be a Government function, not a commercial enterprise to generate profits for that vast litter feeding at the Pentagon trough. If we have to move troops around the world, let us do it as a Government, not as a largesse for contract carriers.

Why is it Government transportation is fit only for the dead of Gander, Beirut, or Saigon?

Let us say today that enough is enough, let us take the commercial profit out of essential military functions. That is all I propose to do, to have the Government perform the tasks essential to military transportation. It makes no more sense to transport troops by charter carrier than it would to contract the operations of the Navy carriers or to contract operations of Air Force missile silos. Surely the living should be honored as much as the dead. Surely the living should be entrusted to military transportation, not farmed out to no-name charter operators.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. NELSON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, due to official business, I was unable to be present and voting on December 17 and 18, 1985, for certain rollcall votes. Had I been present, I would have voted in the following manner: "aye" on roll No. 462, passage of H.R. 3363, for the relief of Hamilton Jordan; "aye" on roll No. 463, the Conte motion to recommit House Joint Resolution 491, making further continuing appropriations for fiscal year 1986, with instructions; "aye" on roll No. 464, passage of House Joint Resolution 491; "aye" on roll No. 465, to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 3132, Law Officers' Protection Act; "aye" on roll No. 472, motion to approve the Journal; and, "aye" on roll No. 473, passage of House Joint Resolution 345, military plane crash victims.

ZERO TOLERANCE—THE NAVY'S MISGUIDED APPROACH

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, it is reported that Secretary of the Navy John Lehman has cracked down on drug abuse by Navy personnel, successfully reducing the incidence of drug abuse from 48 percent to 3 percent. Urinalysis is required of all Navy personnel. Punishment followed positive findings; discharge for repeaters. However, those who admitted drug use before a test have been offered amnesty and rehabilitation. This tough policy, therefore, has allowed an individual a chance for rehabilitation and continued useful service.

It has come to my attention that Secretary of the Navy Lehman has instituted an additional drug policy known as Zero Tolerance, resulting in court martial and possible dishonorable discharge for a first offense by senior enlisted and officer personnel.

Mr. Speaker, chemical dependence is a disease, recognized as such by the American Medical Association, the American Psychiatric Association, and all State medical associations and licensing boards. Rehabilitation, not punishment, is the accepted, recognized response. The Navy's policy is contrary to good medical practice, self-defeating and unnecessarily costly.

The zero tolerance policy is particularly disturbing as applied to Navy health care professionals. Talented individuals in whom the taxpayers have a substantial investment can be separated from the service in disgrace. This policy is not only costly, but it is not a deterrent to others. The particular vulnerability of physicians to chemical dependence is unquestioned. Those Navy physicians reluctant to seek help because of the harsh consequences, continue to practice to the jeopardy of patients in their care.

The zero tolerance policy is directly contradictory to the expressed goal to the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs, Dr. William Mayer. In a publication "Health Matters", volume 1, No. 3, July 1985, entitled "Healt!. Care Providers," Dr. Mayer cites PL-92-129 as requiring that DOD identify, treat and rehabilitate all military personnel who are considered chemically dependent. He supports the claim that physicians are a high risk to develop the disease and argues the folly of separating addicted health care professionals who could be successfully rehabilitated, and in their place recruiting from a population at equal risk. Despite the excellent rehabilitation programs provided by the Navy, current policy opts for court martial rather than rehabilitation.

The Army's program for impaired health care professionals is progressive, realistic, compassionate and provides a method of closely monitored reentry. The Navy would be well-advised to pursue the Army's policy of early intervention, which keeps the chemically dependent within the system.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Mayer's memorandum entitled "Health Matters" follows in full:

HEALTH MATTERS

IMPAIRED HEALTH CARE PROVIDERS

This is another in a series of reports and commentaries on a wide range of issues in military medicine which concern and affect those of us who serve in DoD Health Affairs. Your own suggestions and input are welcomed in future issues.

The American Medical Association has stated ". . . it is the ethical responsibility of any physician who knows of an apparent problem in a colleague to take affirmative action to seek treatment or rehabilitation for his follow physician." Fifty State medical associations either have developed or are developing an impaired health care provider program. Public Law 92-129 requires that DoD identify, treat and rehabilitate all military personnel who are considered chemically dependent.

Physicians, as a result of their training and professional experience, have been shown to be particularly vulnerable to becoming addicted because of the propensity for self-diagnosis and self-medication. The daily accessibility of prescription drugs creates fertile ground for misuse. In addition, medical professionals are often no better educated about the disease of alcoholism and other addictive disorders than other professionals.

We must do more than simply eliminate people from the Services who become impaired emotionally or chemically. To separate physicians, nurses and other health care professionals who have become addicted but could be successfully rehabilitated, and then recruit from a population that will be at equal risk is shortsighted.

Prevention to reduce the incidence and occurrence of new cases, identification of impairment, and intervention and treatment of providers to eliminate the potentially destructive consequences of chemical dependency and emotional impairment are of the highest priority in our efforts to maintain quality of care. Guidance regarding impaired health care providers should be incorporated into service quality assurance programs.

Impairment can become progressive if ignored. Medical and professional societies across the country recognize that only with coercion and confrontation will treatment be effective. When legal action is not required, a nonpunitive approach with emphasis on confidentiality will help promote effective impaired health care provider programs.

It is important to publicize the legitimacy of prevention, identification and treatment. Impaired physicians, nurses and other health care professionals are sometimes reluctant to seek help on their own accord. Too often, we have failed to accept the ethical responsibility of an affirmative posture. Hesitancy to act fosters denial of the problem and could result in needless tragedy.

A DoD Directive providing further guidance will be developed by a Joint-Service group in the near future regarding incorporation of a health care provider program into MTF quality assurance programs. In the meantime, I am communicating through this medium to alert you to the importance of this issue and to enlist your help.

WILLIAM MAYER, M.D.,
Assistant Secretary of Defense (Health Affairs).

Mr. Speaker, I urge Secretary Lehman, at the very minimum, in simple fairness, to put a hold on the continued implementation of the zero tolerance policy as it pertains to health professionals until the study alluded to Dr. Mayer is finalized.

HUMANITARIAN AID TO FREEDOM FIGHTERS WORLDWIDE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I had occasion to visit with the President of the United States on Tuesday on matters involving our economy. I took advantage of our time together to ask that the spring of next year or late winter, in February and March, when this House will again turn its attention, as will the other body, to the foreign policy of our country and what we will do following up on the President's State of the Union message, on helping freedom fighter groups across the countries and reminding him of the appreciation by many Members of this House that he brought up the freedom fighter movements in at least 5 countries around the world to Mr. Gorbachev at the summit talks in Geneva last month and so reported to this great legislative body on the evening of November 21 when we and the other body met in joint session to see a President return to us without any signs of wear and tear from the nonending meetings in Geneva, the clamor of a very large, aggressive, and interested world press corps, and the long jet flights that brought the President from Switzerland back to his United States.

President Reagan told me Tuesday that he would appreciate meeting with members of his own party, with long discussions on which direction to take in this House, and that he would also like to meet with members of the majority party in this House, the minority party in the other body, on how we can come to some sort of bipartisan agreement on the extent and the type of aid to fighters, some of them, as I discussed with the President, very young in years, people that we could describe as boys and girls in their midteens, who are willing to die to offer their lives in the struggle for freedom in their countries.

And I told the President that I had right here in North America, on the border of Nicaragua, in very roughhewn infirmaries, in no way could they be called hospitals, talked to freedom fighters, young men and young women, who were healing from wounds received in battle with the forces of the Communist government of Managua, and told them through simultaneous translation that although we had lost the vote on April 24 to give these very young fighters in those infirmaries humanitarian aid, boots, uniforms, hospital care, medical care, and food, that we would return for another vote in this House and attempt to turn that negative vote of April 24 around. I was not so sure as I stood there with Congressman VIN WEBER at my side, also assuring them we would try and win that fight for them here in the House without any threat to our lives, I was not so sure we would be able to follow through on our promises to them. I told the President that when I mentioned his name, this is last Tuesday, I told the President that when I mentioned the name of President Ronald Reagan to them, that he wanted to help them, that some of them began to cry. The tears rolled down the faces of these combat-hardened young freedom fighters. And when I told the President that, he was visibly moved. I have no witness to verify that because I was alone in the Oval Office with the President. But I give you my word of honor he is well aware that these young people fighting in the hills of Nicaragua, laying their lives down and, for all I know, some of those very people that I discussed with the President, and his intentions to help them in May, died in some of the major offenses against them by Daniel Ortega's forces out of Managua, flying that massive, effective Hind-D Soviet-made helicopter piloted by Cuban officers, maybe some of those very people I spoke to in May died in some of the assaults around Esteli in the month of August while we were all in our districts during our summer break.

And I told the President that we had promised them we would go back and turn the vote around, and we did on June 10. In July there was even a more stunning vote in this House where we won by even a bigger margin, those of us who want to help freedom fighters. That was when we removed the infamous Clark amendments named after a United States Senator long since defeated, that we would remove this last carryover from what I call the Vietnam syndrome that lasted almost 10 years, that the United States no longer had a role of leadership in the world except possibly to try and help people from starving, even if that starvation was caused by communist governments such as the one in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, that we had no role anywhere in the world to help freedom fighters. And that vote in July that took away the Clark amendment, that although the Clark amendment applied specifically to Angola, had thrown a cloud over Afghanistan, Cambodia, Laos—and I have been meeting recently with Laotian freedom fighters. I met recently, in the last few weeks, with people who would still like to see a return to some form of freedom in South Vietnam. In Mozambique, in the northern provinces of Ethiopia; in these eight countries around the world we have no role at all to help people because of the Vietnam syndrome, although in the last decade we have seen a C change where the insurgent groups around the world are not flying red flags and using Russian Kaloshnikov assault rifles, unless they have been taken from Communist governments. But now, except for the insurgency in the Philippines and the one we do not hear about too much any longer, in El Salvador, because President Duarte has won several elections down there and the forces of freedom are winning, now we see insurgencies around the globe in the 8 aforementioned countries where the freedom fighters are aligning themselves with liberty and democratic pluralistic systems and the expansionism of the Soviet Union and their puppet mercenaries from Cuba are on the defensive.

So I would like to discuss with Angola, which, along with Nicaragua, will be part of what the President will propose to this body in late winter/early spring, February, March, April, some of the myths that surround Angola and the Communist government in Luanda.

Myth 1 is that the Cubans are in Angola to protect the Angolan people from the oppressive South African Government. The fact is, the Cuban forces are in Angola to protect the Communist government in Luanda from the Angolan poeple. There is no threat of invasion into Angola from South Africa from South African-administrated Namibia, and the Communists know it well. It is evident by the deployment of the Soviet-equipped Cuban troops. They are not deployed along the southern Angolan border near Namibia or South Africa; they are deployed in the north around the city of Luanda, and the Cubans are also in the north in the oil-rich enclave of Cabinda which, although separated by some land, is north of the northern border of Angola.

The Cubans in the past have desperately avoided all conflict with the South African forces, but they actively participate in every military action they can against the true representatives of freedom and the people of Angola, Jonas Savimbi's forces. Also, Castro intervened in Angola long before the South African forces came to the support of Savimbi within the country. South African military forces have entered Angola primarily because the Communist government has allowed the SWAPO organization, South West African People's Organization, a Communist front group, to use Angola as a sanctuary to carry out terrorist acts against Namibia which, for good or bad, has been administered by South Africa since the German governments were removed after World War II.

Myth No. 2, that U.S. aid will only make the Communists in Angola more dependent upon the Soviet Union and Cuba. The fact is that it is hard to imagine how the Angolans could become any more dependent on the Soviets and their satraps than they already are.

We have done nothing to help the democratic resistance in Angola for over 10 years since the Senator Clark amendment was enacted into law. Yet the Soviet and the Cuban presence, without any external threat, has continued to grow. There are now more than 35,000 Cuban forces inside this large and embattled African nation.

Soviet commanders are now directing battles while Cuban pilots, just as they do in Nicaragua, fly that large, effective, and dreaded Hind-D helicopter. The helicopters and the Mig-21's flown against the Angolan people are flown by Cuban pilots, North American people killing blacks in the name of communism.

President Reagan has publicly announced that he favors aiding Jonas Savimbi's anti-Communist forces, and there is strong congressional support for renewing aid to UNITA. But the blame America first crowd in determined to prevent the United States from helping Angolan freedom fighters. These myopic fear merchants are spreading myths designed to counteract conservative actions and reintroduce the worst effects of the Vietnam syndrome.

Myth 1: The Cubans are in Angola to protect the Angolan people from the South Africans.

The fact is that the Cuban forces are in Angola to protect the Communist government from the Angolan people. There is no threat of invasion of Angola from South African administered South-West Africa/Namibia and the Communists know it. It is evident by the deployment of Soviet-equipped Cuban forces. They are not deployed along the southern Angolan border, where they would be if there was any fear of invasion. The Cubans are in the north around the capital city of Luanda and in the oil rich Cabinda enclave north of Angola proper. The Cubans in the past have avoided clashes with South Africa; but they actively participate in military action against the true representatives of the Angolan people, Savimbis forces.

Also, Castro intervened in Angola long before South African forces came to the support of Savimbi within the country. South African military forces have entered Angola primarily because the communist government has allowed the South West African People's Organization [SWAPO] to use Angola as sanctuary to carry out terrorist acts against South-West Africa/Namibia.

Myth 2: U.S. aid will only make the communists in Angola more dependent on the Soviet Union and Cuba.

The fact is that it is hard to imagine how the Angolans could become any more dependent on the Soviets and their satraps. We have done nothing to help the democratic resistance in Angola for over 10 years, yet the Soviet and Cuban presence has continued to grow. There are more than 35,000 Cuban forces inside that embattled nation. Soviet commanders are now directing battles, while Cubans pilot the Soviet Hind helicopters and Mig fighters flying against the Angolan people.

While United States-owned Gulf/Chevron Oil has created more than 60 percent of the hard currency that pays for communist control of Angola, the Soviet Union has taken about $2 billion of these petro dollars for military equipment support. The Soviet Union has given precious little in economic aid, and what little they did give is certainly not free.

Myth 3: Support for UNITA is support for Apartheid.

The fact is South African support for UNITA, like that of other African nations, stems from a common goal—riding Africa of the scourge of Soviet hegemony and of the economic stagnation that always accompanies communism. No one of conscience supports the machinations of apartheid, but why curse the Angolan people with a system that keeps them apart from freedom. Reform within South Africa is far too slow but will come to a stop if communism overwhelms Savimbi and takes over in all of Angola. It is the height of hypocrisy for liberals to denigrate South Africa's relationships with its neighbors. Not only do a number of black African nations support UNITA, and find no conflict, but even the so-called front line states recognize and accept South Africa's economic leadership in the region.

Myth 4: Savimbi is a Marxist.

The fact is Savimbi is not a Marxist. Savimbi stands for negotiated settlement and pluralism, the unification of his country, and the elimination of all foreign troops from Angola. It is true that prior to 1975, Savimbi did receive Chinese support from Mao, and advocated a socialist program along Chinese lines. But even John Stockwell, the former CIA Angolan task force officer, and now unfortunately is an ardent opponent of U.S. involvement anywhere because of frustration over weak policies, stated Savimbi was "neither a Marxist nor capitalist * * * but an Angolan patriot."

What is most interesting about this myth is the people who support it have made careers of endorsing or supporting Marxist governments elsewhere. All of a sudden, these dedicated liberals are now concerned that President Savimbi's political philosophy may be left of center. These same individuals show no such concern over Marxists in Mozambique, in Nicaragua, or in the Soviet Union.

Myth 5: The MPLA is negotiating a Cuban withdrawal.

The fact is that the MPLA is negotiating a permanent Cuban presence. It is the Cuban presence that is actually undermining U.S. efforts to bring peace and stability to the region.

Angola, like other Communist nations, uses negotiations as a tactical tool in support of its parochial interests. Communists do not enter negotiations as a means of compromise or for mutual problem solving.

For nearly 10 years the United States has been attempting to negotiate in good faith with the Luanda government. The U.S. State Department has again expressed hope over negotiations. But it is curious that this renewed dialogue only occurs in the wake of U.S. declarations of possible support for action against the Communist regime in Luanda.

Myth 6: The Democratic Resistance cannot win:

The simple fact is that UNITA forces are winning. This is the reason the Soviet and Cubans have stepped up their activities within Angola. The pro-Western forces today control a substantial portion of the Angolan countryside and enjoy considerable popular support. The area under their control is well managed and free. But these free areas come under regular attack by Soviet and Cuban manned aircraft and tanks.

The UNITA freedom forces have been fortunate in that, even without United States help, they have held their own against superior forces that are Soviet-equipped and Cuban-trained. The Communist forces have launched a major offensive in August against UNITA, with direct Soviet and Cuban assistance, direction and participation. The UNITA forces are managing with substantial loss of life to hold on to their territory, but reports indicate that they may not be able to hold on indefinitely in the face of superior Soviet weapons.

The forces of freedom are on the very edge of turning the struggle to bring down the Communist government in Luanda. We, the United States, can make the difference. As President Reagan correctly said in his speech before the United Nations last month, "America's moral and material support for struggling resistance forces must not and shall not cease." I will try in February and March to support our President resolve to do what is right. Join me.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize Members for 1-minute requests or for special orders.

BLESSED ARE THE PEACEKEEPERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, December 12, 248 members of the 101st Airborne died on their way home from a vital peacekeeping mission in the Mideast. They died serving their country in the highest calling possible, keeping the peace.

Too often, when we hear of tragedies that involve many people, we hear only the numbers, we sometimes fail to understand the tragedy on its human level.

These servicemen and the crew of the plane had families and friends in almost every State—the loss is felt nationwide.

Last week, we lost two young service men with families from our district, seven all together from Maryland—the faces of tragedy are known in our neighborhoods.

One of the young men, Alexander Stearn, of Lutherville—my hometown—was aboard that plane. Five others, James Duckworth, David Heidecker, Robert Hoyer, Christopher Thornton, and Michael Whiteman, were from Maryland.

The next day, a young sailor, Seaman William E. Davis, whose grandparents live in Perry Hall, died in the hospital at Norfolk from injuries received in an accident while serving at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. He was painting his ship and fell onto a barge from a Jacob's ladder.

Both young men were 21 years old. The beginning of their lives—but, like many soldiers and sailors and airmen before them—hopes and dreams will not be fulfilled.

As a memorial to all of these men and women, we should renew, redouble our efforts to achieve a meaningful peace in the Middle East. One that will not require our troops—our loved ones—to be stationed, at risk, in any foreign post; and, one that will not require them to, possibly, sacrifice their lives.

In the interim, many questions need to be answered about charter services which seem to be regularly used for transport by the military. I am aware that millions of air miles have been safely flown by military charters. However, when we ask our soldiers, sailors and airmen to place themselves in harm's way, it is only fitting that we provide them with the best and safest transportation to return them to their loved ones.

Our sympathy today goes not only to the relatives and friends of these men and women—to the Stearn family and the Davis family—but also to General Burton Patrick and the 101st Airborn Division at Fort Campbell.

Some of my staff visited Fort Campbell in August. They came back with reports of the fine training program being run down there by General "Pat" Patrick—how proud the troops were to be a part of the "Screaming Eagles."

I'm sure the troops lost in Gander felt that same pride. And the men and women at Fort Campbell feel their loss at the deepest level. Comrades have gone down.

We ask a lot of our soldiers and sailors in peace time. The danger many of them face daily is forgotten by the rest of us as we go about our busy lives—until a Gander occurs. Then we must pause and think about them all—the quick and the dead.

We must be grateful to them all for taking our place in some far off corner of the world—at great risk to themselves.

The Beatitudes say, "Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God." In these days of turmoil in the world—I think Jesus would have also blessed the peacekeepers—so should we all.

(4) The George Washington University Revenue Bond Act of 1985 (Series A).

The provisions of subsections (a) and (b) shall not apply to the District of Columbia act described in clause (4) of this subsection unless such act is passed by the District of Columbia by December 31, 1985. If the District of Columbia act described in clause (4) is passed by the District of Columbia after the date of enactment of this Act but before January 1, 1986, the effective date of such act, notwithstanding subsection (b) of this section, shall be the date of passage by the District of Columbia.

Mr. DELLUMS (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so to ask the gentleman [Mr. DELLUMS] to explain the amendment, and I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] for that purpose.

Mr. DELLUMS. I thank my distinguished colleague for yielding.

First, Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the purpose of the bill H.R. 3781, which passed the House several weeks ago was to waive the 30-day congressional review period required by section 6021(c)(1) of the District of Columbia Self-Government and Governmental Reorganization Act, euphemistically referred to as the Home Rule Act, for certain acts passed by the District of Columbia which authorized the issuance of revenue bonds.

Further, I would say to my colleague, the District of Columbia acts authorizing the issuance, sale, and delivery of revenue bonds referred to are as follows: the Georgetown University Higher Education Facilities Revenue Bond Act of 1985, the George Washington University Revenue Bond Act of 1985, Sibley Memorial Hospital Revenue Bond Act of 1985, and finally, the Washington Hospital Center Corporation Revenue Bond Act of 1985.

Those were the four issuances that passed the House of Representatives. The Senate amendment took out two of the bond issuances that passed the House that have now already become law as a result of time. They are specifically the George Washington University Revenue Bond Act of 1985, District of Columbia Act 6-76, and also the Washington Hospital Center Corporation Revenue Bond Act of 1985, District of Columbia Act 6-92.

So those two were deleted.

What the Senate included as their amendments were two additional issuances: George Washington University Bond Issuance, 1985, D.C. 6114, and American University Issuance DC6112.

So to summarize, the House of Representatives asked to waive the 30-day congressional review period for the purposes of the issuance of four bonds, two of them have now become law. What the Senate bill simply did was to strike the two that have already become law, leave the two that passed the House, and added the two that the gentleman just referred to.

The recommendation of this side of the aisle is that we accept the Senate amendments and concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, the minority fully supports the bill and the Senate amendments, and I withdraw my reservation.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand that the unanimous consent is for consideration only and that the question will be put on the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is a unanimous-consent request to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. WALKER. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the original motion of the gentleman, was it for consideration?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The original request of the gentleman was to concur in the Senate amendments. The request immediately pending is to waive further reading and to consider the Senate amendments as having been read.

Mr. WALKER. Further reserving the right to object, I wonder if the gentleman could revise his motion to allow unanimous consent for consideration so that we do not have to go through a rules process but would do so in a way that the Chair can, in fact, put the question on the legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that if the reservations are withdrawn, all that is agreed to at this moment is that the Senate amendment be considered as read. Later the Chair will ask if there is objection to the gentleman's request that the Senate amendment be agreed to.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the Chair. I understand the position we are in, and I certainly do not have any objection to the situation of no further reading. What I am seeking to do is to get a vote on the final passage of the resolution, and that would evidently demand a little different kind of motion from the gentleman. I do not want to stand in the way. I intend to vote for the legislation. But I would like to do it with a record vote at this point in the evening.

So if the gentleman [Mr. DELLUMS] could modify his request so that when we get to that point, the Chair puts the question on the legislation.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. Under my reservation, I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DELLUMS. This gentleman understands what our unanimous consent request is. The gentleman is not in opposition to it. What the gentleman is attempting to do is simply bringing the Members of the body over here and using the vehicle of a rollcall vote in order to do it. This gentleman has no objection to that.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation to the pending unanimous consent request and then will assume that the gentleman will make a different unanimous consent request to the one which was made in the first instance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman withdraws his reservation of objection?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

The Chair reads no objection to dispensing with further reading of the Senate amendments.

Now the gentleman from Pennsylvania apparently desires a recorded vote. The Chair would advise that one of two things might occur. The gentleman from California might withdraw his initial request and ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration of the Senate amendment in the House.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, I would amend my request to reflect the recommendation of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman now move to concur in the Senate amendments?

Mr. DELLUMS. I so move, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] to concur in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device; and there were—yeas 344, nays 3, answered "present" 2, not voting 85, as follows:

□ 1900

Mr. STUMP and Mr. RUDD changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

So the motion was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the motion just agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WRIGHT). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

LOW-LEVEL RADIOACTIVE WASTE POLICY AMENDMENTS ACT OF 1985

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 1083) to amend the Low-Level Radioactive Waste Policy Act to improve procedures for the implementation of compacts providing for the establishment and operation of regional disposal facilities for low-level radioactive waste, and for other purposes with Senate amendments thereto, concur in the Senate amendment to the title, and concur in the Senate amendment to the text with an amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments and the House amendment to the Senate amendments as follows:

(Senate amendments appear in the Senate proceedings in Part III.)

House amendment to Senate amendments: Page 33, strike line 15 and all that follows through "actions"; on page 36, line 13.

Mr. UDALL (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments and the House amendment to the Senate amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

Mr. LUJAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I take this time simply to ask the chairman of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs to give us an explanation as to what is in this bill and what differences there might be between us and the Senate.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I also reserve the right to object.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUJAN. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the Senate has been involved in internal negotiations on the low-level radioactive waste compact legislation for a number of weeks. The bill they sent to us today is a tenuous settlement which we understand is acceptable both to States with low-level waste disposal capacity, and to those States needing disposal capacity until new sites can be developed. It is tough on the States that have to develop this capacity over the next 7 years, but there is a consensus that we should settle this legislation and approve the compacts this year so that the regional groups can move forward to build their new management capability.

We have agreed to accept the Senate proposal, with its substantially tougher milestones and tighter emergency exemption provision. Most significant, we have agreed to the Senate's requirement that the States take title to low-level waste generated in their territory in 1996. We believe all States will have developed management ability by that time. Although States are also liable for damages consequential to taking title to the waste, we intend this a very narrow liability limited to situations in which State actions are directly involved.

We believe the States will act responsibly to take care of low-level waste, and that waste obligations under the Atomic Energy Act.

I encourage support of this bill and congratulate my colleagues on their effort. Mr. DINGELL, Mr. MARKEY, Mr. LUJAN, Mr. BROYHILL, and particularly Mr. DERRICK who has so ably represented the interests of both his State and the Nation.

Mr. BONKER Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my support for H.R. 1083, the Low-Level Radioactive Waste Policy Act Amendments of 1985, and trust that in these final moments of this session, Congress will give final approval to this important legislation. If we fail to act on this bill in a timely manner, Congress will have lost an opportunity to avert a potential crisis, and the consensus that has developed in support of the measure could be pulled apart.

Currently, an intolerable situation exists with respect to the disposal of low-level radioactive waste—nuclear garbage which is slightly radioactive and generally decays within a matter of years. Three States, Washington, South Carolina and Nevada, now have the Nation's only commercial low-level disposal sites. My State of Washington took 52 percent of this waste last year.

Understandably, the people of these three States do not want to continue to be the dumping grounds for low-level radioactive waste from other States when those States could dispose of their own waste locally. Inaction has forced the Governors of the three receiving States to threaten to close their disposal sites by January 1 if Congress fails to approve this legislation, which would force other regions to handle their own waste by the end of 1992.

It appeared that Congress had solved the low-level waste problem in 1980 with the enactment of the Low-Level Radioactive Waste Policy Act. The act allows States to form regional disposal compacts and, upon congressional ratification, turn away all waste from outside their regions after January 1, 1986. Seven regional compacts have been sent to Congress for ratification. Unfortunately, delays have prevented the opening of any other commercial disposal sites and Congress has refused to ratify any of the compacts.

The amendments now under consideraton are the result of a delicately crafted compromise which enjoys almost universal support. The House passed its version of the measure unanimously. In brief, the bill would continue nationwide access to the three commercial disposal sites through the end of 1992. In exchange, areas without waste sites would have to meet a series of interim deadlines for opening their own disposal sites. A State or region missing the deadlines would risk losing disposal access.

Without passage of this legislation, the three receiving States could decide to make good on their threat to close their sites to all outside waste. This would cause a low-level radioactive waste disposal crisis that would have an almost immediate impact on hospitals and research facilities, which typically have limited storage facilities. Nuclear powerplants, which produce most of the Nation's low-level waste, usually have several month's storage capacity onsite. This disposal crisis can be averted by the passage of this vital measure.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and also that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of the legislation now under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona that the amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD?

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, the bill we are acting upon tonight does not contain a particular provision which would straighten out some problems we have been having relating to the disposal of substances under the Hazardous Waste and Solid Waste Disposal Act at low-level radioactive disposal sites.

I am particularly concerned about this issue, and I note that the two versions of H.R. 1093 which this body has previously passed and sent to the other body contained a section relating to the disposal of mixed waste. In particular, each of these sections provided that the Administrator of EPA and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission would jointly revise and promulgate regulations relating to mixed waste as those regulations would be involved in the disposal of hazardous waste in a low-level-radiation waste disposal facility.

In addition, these sections would provide for the consolidation of procedures for applications for permits under the Solid Waste Disposal Act and licenses under part 61 of title X, Code of Federal Regulations.

Thus, we are left with a big problem that we had spent weeks and weeks trying to solve. Earlier today, Chairman UDALL and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] assured us that we would be having hearings on this sensitive issue early next year and that we would visit that issue. All of us have accepted that assurance, and while I am sure we would prefer to see Congress resolve the matter once and for all today, I and others have agreed to support this bill, even though this important section has been deleted.

So with that understanding, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Speaker, under my reservation, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BROYHILL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I merely want to say that congratulations are in order to my colleagues for their willingness to work out this bill. I think this is a good example of where Members can work together on a bipartisan basis to bring out a very complex bill. It took a great deal of hard work and a lot of good will and cooperation to bring the bill this far. I want to thank them for their efforts in bringing it this far.

The gentleman from Michigan, the gentleman from Massachusetts, the gentleman from California, the gentleman from New Mexico, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DERRICK], and others have worked very hard on this bill. I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of it.

It is a fact that the concern the gentleman just brought up is one provision that has been struck from this bill, but as the gentleman knows, there are some differences of opinion on both sides. I think this is something we can resolve later, but we ought to go ahead and pass this bill tonight.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUJAN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate my colleagues on both sides of the aisle for the tremendous job they have done in bringing this low-level waste bill to the House tonight in its present form.

Mr. Speaker, I am very happy that we are today accepting the Senate amendment to the House low-level radioactive waste bill. I believe this is a strong bill and I compliment my colleagues on their willingness to adopt the Senate version of H.R. 1083, with one change in order to adopt low-level radioactive waste legislation this year. The Senate version is based on the House version with a few changes. I believe my colleagues have handled a challenging situation quickly and well, and I want to thank them for all their efforts.

This bill responds positively to the needs of the three States in which disposal facilities are located and encourages other States to develop sites. It provides the three sited States with the authority to impose surcharges on generators from States which have failed to meet the milestones for the development of new sites. It also provides for a rebate of 25 percent of the surcharges changed for each of the milestones met.

Additionally, the bill provides emergency access to the existing three sites whenever necessary to address a threat to the public health and safety. Moreover, this bill limits the number of extensions to one, and conditions the emergency access upon a showing of diligence by the States who have failed to meet milestones.

Finally, in the interest of reaching agreement this year on low-level radioactive waste legislation, the House has agreed to address the question of how mixed waste—waste which is both hazardous and slightly radioactive—should be regulated early next year.

In sum, I believe the bill we have before us now is a good bill and should be approved.

Mr. LUJAN. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the gentleman and those involved for bringing this to a head here at the 11th hour.

I would urge that all present here support the effort to send this back, to take the amendment and send it back to the Senate, and that we go ahead and pass this measure. I think it is extremely important, not only to the State of South Carolina, but to the entire Nation.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUJAN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, this is a problem that we as a nation have failed to deal with for the last 50 years. This is one of the first steps that we have made as a nation to take care of low-level nuclear wastes.

I want to commend the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL], Chairman DINGELL, Chairman MARKEY, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BROYHILL], and many others who have spent thousands of hours in bringing this bill to this point.

I ask that you support it tonight. We need to pass it. We need to get it on the books to have a sane, low-level nuclear policy in this country.

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] want me to yield, or does the gentleman want his own time?

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I will seek my own time, but I would certainly commend the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY].

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I support the action today as a reasonable compromise on the low-level waste issue. The Senate amendment is very similar to the House-passed bill. Matters that were dropped, in many cases, can and will be accomplished through existing laws.

The issue of the regulation of mixed waste, that is the waste in both hazardous waste and low-level waste, has been a highly controversial issue in this bill. There are strongly held views on both sides and, frankly, there is just not enough time to resolve the differences at this point. The Energy and Commerce Committee is committed to holding hearings on this issue early next year, and I understand that Chairman UDALL has agreed to make a similar commitment.

One issue which was addressed in the House bill and not included in the Senate bill concerns the question of class C waste.

The House provision required the NRC to review its disposal requirements for materials whose hazardous life exceeds the period of institutional control and to increase the stringency of such requirements by rule if necessary to protect the public health and safety.

The Senate contained a provision which requires the licensing of above class C waste. Given this provision, a separate provision relating to the regulation of class C waste was not necessary provided that the NRC carry out the mandate of the House provision under its existing authorities as well as its expanded authorities in the Senate bill. It is our intent that the NRC does conduct the review required in the House bill. The proper procedures for handling and disposing of class C waste is a matter of serious concern. As chairman of the Energy Conservation and Power Subcommittee, and as a manager of this legislation, I am committed to ensuring that the NRC carries out the mandate of the House provision.

It is our understanding that when the NRC shall consider waste streams on a case-by-base basis under the below regulatory concern section, they shall also consider the cumulative impact of such exemptions.

Let me make a few remarks about the emergency access provision.

There are several issues concerning the emergency access provision which I would like to clarify at this point.

First, the emergency access provision does not limit the number of grants of emergency access which a generator or Governor may request. While it is clear that a generator may only seek one extension of a grant of access, nothing in this provision would permit a generator from seeking more than one grant of emergency access.

Second, when the NRC is making a determination to grant emergency access on whether an alternative to access exists, the NRC shall consider not only the threat to the public health and safety if activities which lead to the production of waste were curtailed or stopped. For example, if the cessation of operations at a concern which produces medical devices would mitigate the need for access, but would at the same time impact the quality of medical care available to the public, requiring the concern to cease operation would not be an alternative consistent with the public health and safety.

One of the more controversial provisions in the Senate bill relates to States assuming title and liability for waste in 1996 and to require States to reimburse generators for surcharges. I have requested the Congressional Research Service to study the constitutionality of such a requirement. Their findings, in a study dated December 16, 1985, found that these provisions raise constitutional issues under the 10th and 11th amendments. I agree. I cannot recall any statute which has ever sought to impose such a liability on States. The provision may not pass a constitutional challenge and if it should, I would expect the interpretation of liabilities to be construed extremely narrowly, and not broadly as some may contend. It is upon such a narrow interpretation that I have agreed to this provision.

Because the provision comes in only 1996 or 1993, it is intended that the provision be severable from the rest of the act, should it be found unconstitutional. I further note that the provision requiring taking title is applicable to all States, not just those whose compact is conditionally consented. This fact raises further constitutional questions, raised by the Congressional Research Service, since it cannot be said that this requirement is a condition for consent.

In the House bill a clear statement was made that utilities are entitled to 11.9 million cubic feet and nonutility generators are entitled to 7.7 million. Under the Senate bill only mention is made as to the 11.9 million cubic feet allocated to the utilities. It is our understanding that nonutilities are entitled to 7.7 million cubic feet under this bill, that is, the remaining capacity under section 5(b). In addition, the section of this bill which authorizes the sited States to limit the acceptance of low-level radioactive waste to a total amount over the 7-year period requires those State to accept at the very least the aggregate amounts listed in section 5(b).

Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUJAN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Massachusetts was saying, the bill as it came out of the Energy and Commerce Committee included an amendment which would clarify that the Environmental Protection Agency has authority to regulate mixed wastes at facilities zoned by the Department of Energy.

This is very important to my district. I consider it a very important amendment.

Now, it is not my intention to hold this up, since the Senate has stripped it out and has taken the action at this late hour of taking it out. I will not insist upon this amendment and I will not object, but I am glad that the gentleman from Massachusetts has made it clear that there will be a series of hearings and I hope that we can include in those series of hearings the question of Federal facilities and the EPA control of such facilities.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman continue to yield?

Mr. LUJAN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I give assurances to the gentleman from Ohio that the issue to which he refers will be dealt with comprehensively in hearings before the Energy and Commerce Committee and that his interest in the issue is, in fact, the spurring motivation for those hearings.

Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from New Mexico if he will continue to yield.

Mr. LUJAN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, while this compromise includes some provisions I am highly skeptical of and which may be of dubious constitutionality, such as the requirement relating to taking title by the State or reimbursing generators, it does include many important provisions from the House bill, and I think it will resolve a potential crisis that looms in this area; so I support this compromise.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the indulgence of the gentleman from New Mexico if it would be possible for me to engage in a colloquy with either the gentleman from Arizona or the gentleman from Michigan as to the issue of so-called class "C" wastes.

Mr. Speaker, the House bill contained language, approved by both committees of jurisdiction, which instructs the NRC to undertake a review of its regulations concerning the disposal of so-called class C wastes, and, if necessary to enter a formal rulemaking to ensure that such disposal standards are adequate to minimize the threat to the public health and safety which may arise in connection with materials for which the hazardous life exceeds the period of institutional control established in present regulations.

The Senate bill, to which we are largely receding, does not contain such an explicit study provision. Rather, it is my understanding that it contains language which would establish a new requirement that the NRC license any disposal facility for so-called above class C wastes, for which the Federal Government is explicitly given management responsibility for the first time.

Am I correct in saying, that our decision to recede to the Senate provision on this point, and not to insist on the class C study provision contained in the House bill, is made in the belief that such a study will be necessary in order for the NRC to execute its responsibility to provide for licensing the entire so-called orphan waste category, which it is now responsible for under this act?

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUJAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to concur in the commitment the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LUKEN] made 1 minute ago.

With regard to the question the gentleman just propounded, I would say yes, the gentleman is correct.

It is my belief that the language in the act, now contained in section 3, which requires the Federal Government to assume responsibility for disposing of all above class C wastes, and which requires that such disposal be accomplished in licensed facilities, gives the NRC all the authority necessary to accomplish the kind of review contemplated in the House language, and further, that such a review will, in my opinion, be found necessary in order for the NRC to discharge its responsibilities under section 3 of the bill now under consideration.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much for his assurances.

I compliment the gentleman from New Mexico and the chairman of the full Committee on Energy and Commerce and the Interior Committee, the ranking minority members of the relative committees, and especially the gentleman from California [Mr. MOORHEAD] who worked with me on our committee in the effort that he has put into this particular bill.

We have worked long and hard, along with the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DERRICK] and many others to make this bill in fact the success that it has become.

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FOLEY].

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the bill and the amendment and compliment all who have taken part in reaching this compromise.

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I have two other requests for time. Under my reservation, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New Mexico for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, Congress made a promise back in 1980 on the subject of low-level wastes. This bill is a partial fulfillment of that promise, and a satisfying fulfillment. It approved seven regional compacts and a compromise plan for the future rquested by the current three host States.

The measure reflects excellent work done by the House, modified slightly by the Senate, and an agreement worked out, as we have heard in the colloquy between the two chairman.

I compliment the chairmen involved, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY] and the appropriate ranking Members.

We have this evening by the passage of this measure fulfilled a promise made a number of years ago and we put low-level nuclear waste in the difficult job of the "well done" column for the 99th Congress.

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, let me ask the chairman of the Energy Committee, does the gentleman want me to yield?

Mr. DINGELL. Yes; Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUJAN. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is doing a splendid job of administering the time on this. I want to commend the gentleman for it, not only for his patience, but for the grace with which he does it in this matter.

Mr. Speaker, I commend all the Members who have worked on this, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. LUJAN], who has been handling the time so well; our good friend, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DERRICK], to whom this legislation has been a matter of special concern; the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SWIFT] who has worked hard on this matter, as has the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY] the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, my old and esteemed friend, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL], who has provided such valuable leadership in this matter; and my special friend, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BROYHILL], the senior Republican member of our Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Senator SIMPSON and Senator STAFFORD in the other body deserve special praise, as does Governor Riley of South Carolina, who has worked extremely hard to get this matter to the point where it is, as has my own Governor, Governor Blanchard, to whom this was a matter of special interest.

I also compliment the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY], the chairman of the subcommittee, who was very instrumental in this and deserves the appreciation and commendation of the house for this. In addition, I wish to commend the gentleman from California [Mr. MOORHEAD], the ranking Republican member of the subcommittee, for his constant attention to this matter.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, which was H.R. 1083, a measure passed by both the Committee on Energy and Commerce and the Committee on the Interior and Insular Affairs, chaired by my beloved friend, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL], and the bill we act on today is a fundamental compromise worked out by the two committees, that would be the subcommittees in the House, and also by our good friends in the Senate.

The legislative history, I believe, established in these committees is certain to apply. I know one provision adopted by the Senate and passed by the House, the provision states that in 1996 certain circumstances with regard to taking title of nuclear wastes and paying damages to generators. I would expect this provision to be construed narrowly and not in a fashion that would, for example, mean any generator should not have to mitigate damages for his actions.

This is not, as I understand it, a punitive provision. It is part, rather, of the teeth which are in this legislation to encourage the States to accept and to meet their responsibilities.

It is clear that Congress must recognize that the States of governmental bodies should be afforded the respect that is due to institutions of that kind.

Mr. Chairman, In addition, I note that while the "Emergency Access provision of the legislation (section 6) remains essentially as it first was passed by the House, the other body has added a provision specifying that the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC), upon receiving a request for emergency access, also should determine whether the threat can be mitigated by "* * * ceasing activities that generate low-level radioactive waste." This is a matter which caused great debate within the Committee on Energy and Commerce. While the original House bill did not specify in statute that the NRC make such a determination, the committee report discusses how the NRC should act if a reduction in waste generation would lead to a significant curtailment of production activities in an industry. The report notes that in the case of a hospital or medical services company, or other entity affecting the public health, the NRC would not be expected to require such activities to cease if such cessation, in turn, would result in a public health emergency. As I read the bill now before us, such a determination certainly could continue to be made.

Finally, I would like to comment on the subject of "mixed waste"—those wastes which are both radioactive and "hazardous," as defined by the Solid Waste Disposal Act (RCRA). The House amendment to the Senate amendments made as part of the unanimous consent request of the gentleman from Arizona, Mr. Udall, would delete from the bill the section on "mixed wastes." I support this amendment. At this point in the session, there is not time for the House and Senate to work out the differences between the provisions passed by each body, and this provision alone should not stand in the way of our acting on this important bill. More importantly, however, I support this amendment because it is essential that the Congress be fully and accurately informed regarding the current disposal options for those who create these "mixed wastes," including the medical generators, and the environmental ramifications of adopting one proposed solution over another.

Over the past few weeks, I have heard a great deal from hospitals and other medical facilities which generate these "mixed wastes" about their concern that failure to include "mixed waste" provisions in this legislation—and specifically a 1-year extension for compliance with RCRA by those who dispose of "mixed wastes"—will leave them with no available disposal option and may force them to cease operation. In this regard, I would like to include in the RECORD a letter I received from a company called "Quadrex Corporation." That company claims to dispose of medical scintillation vials through a combination of decontamination, incineration and landfill disposal—all in a manner which complies with applicable environmental regulations. The letter attempts to correct misinformation regarding the availability of alternative means of disposal, and concludes by noting that even if the existing low level radioactive waste sites stop accepting liquid scintillation vials, "[t]here is every reason to expect that disposal of these vials can and will continue without interruption." On the basis of this and other information, I do not expect the medical facilities which generate these mixed wastes to be without disposal options when we delete the "mixed waste" provisions from this bill.

QUADREX CORPORATION,
Campbell, California, November 15, 1985.
HONORABLE JOHN D. DINGELL,
The U.S. House of Representatives, House Office Building, Washington, D.C.

Re: Low Level Radioactive Waste Policy Act Amendments of 1985

DEAR MR. DINGELL: Quadrex is aware (i.e., RCRA hazardous waste and low level radioactive waste) has been an issue under debate during consideration of the Low Level Radioactive Waste Policy Act Amendments of 1985. Our understanding is that, in the course of that debate, some parties are asserting that disposal of mixed wastes may cease because of interagency jurisdictional and regulatory problems. This assertion has apparently been made with respect to liquid scintillation vials from hospitals, nuclear medicine facilities, research laboratories and the like.

This letter does not address any Quadrex position on how we believe government agencies and the Congress should handle the mixed waste issue in general. However, we believe it is important to know the true facts regarding some of the assertions made in the debate over mixed wastes. Quadrex has a facility in Gainesville, Florida which currently decontaminates and disposes of approximately 70 percent of the liquid scintillation vials in the United States This facility, with minor improvements, has the capability to handle disposal of 100 percent of the liquid scintillation vials. Our disposal process completely decontaminates the plastic or glass vials, which are crushed, rinsed with a proprietary solution, and then disposed of in a convenient landfill. The toluene and xylene from the vials and the solution we use to clean off the toxic and radioactive parts of the liquid scintillation cocktail from the vials, as well as the low level radioactive waste, are burned as waste fuel in an EPA-approved rotary kiln facility. Effluents from the kiln are monitored and are below allowable discharge levels. The whole process is carried out in compliance with all applicable environmental regulations.

Thus, we believe there is a misunderstanding over present ability to handle the mixed waste question as applied to liquid scintillation vials. There is every reason to expect that disposal of these vials can and will continue without interruption. To the extent that any of the existing low level waste disposal sites does not accept liquid scintillation vials, our Gainesville facility has the capacity to decontaminate and dispose of any such vials. There may even be economic incentive to decontaminate, as we do, over burial of these mixed wastes.

I hope this letter may have helped to clarify this issue.

Sincerely yours,

SHERMAN NAYMARK

Another reason we have dropped the "mixed waste" provision is to allow the committees in both bodies to examine the issue in greater detail. In this regard, I hope that the hearings will consider the record of environmental compliance by the operators of those low level radioactive waste disposal facilities which to date have accepted "mixed waste." I am deeply concerned by reports that one or more of these operators, on the basis of alleged regulatory "overlap and inconsistency," has failed to comply with regulations which are neither overlapping nor inconsistent. As we examine the record of the Federal and State agencies in attempting to coordinate their regulatory schemes, let us also examine the record of the licensees and determine whether they were taking all "practicable" steps to come into compliance with the regulations and protect the public health and safety.

It is fashionable in this time of "regulatory reform" to talk about streamlining the regulatory process and making the process more manageable for those subject to regulation by multiple agencies. At the same time, however, we must not lose sight of the reason why there is regulation, and why we established multiple agencies in the first place. With "mixed waste," multiple agencies are involved because multiple agencies have expertise—the NRC has expertise regarding the management of radioactive wastes, and the EPA regarding the management of "hazardous wastes." Any solution we adopt in the future must not remove one of these agencies without assuring the continued availability of the needed expertise to solve the problem at hand. I support streamlining the regulatory process, but not at the price of public health and safety and an avoidably high risk of future harm to the environment.

The legislation is, I believe, desirable and the amendment suggested by my dear friend, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL], is one which I believe is of great importance in terms of the legislation. The gentleman from Arizona will, I am sure, construe the amendment further according to its terms and, of course, I will have certain additional comments to make on it at an appropriate time.

Mr. REID. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUJAN. I yield to the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. REID. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Governor of the State of Nevada and the people of the State of Nevada, I would like to commend Chairman DINGELL, Chairman UDALL, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY], the chairman of the subcommittee, and the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. LUJAN] for the work that has been done.

I think the approach has been reasonable, and this has been exemplified by the work that has been done in the last 24 hours by you gentlemen.

Again, I appreciate very much taking into consideration the serious problems that the States of Washington, Nevada, and South Carolina have.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation. The State of Texas is going to be its own depository under the Low-Level Waste Act. There are several amendments in this bill that are very beneficial to our State, and I would commend Chairman DINGELL, Chairman UDALL, and the ranking minority members on my side of the aisle for their excellent efforts in the last 24 hours, and I would urge Members to support this bill.

Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentlewoman from Nevada.

Mrs. VUCANOVICH. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I support this legislation. The issue of low-level waste is of prime concern to my State of Nevada, as well as the States of Washington and South Carolina.

I would like to commend the chairmen of all of the committees who have been involved, and also our ranking minority members who have worked very hard in a bipartisan fashion.

Mr. Speaker, at this moment we stand at an important juncture in resolving and defining policy with respect to low-level waste management.

As the only member on the Interior Committee who represents a State with an existing low-level waste site, I am well aware of the vital importance of this legislation for my State. I am anxious that this legislation become law as soon as possible, to avert the health and safety hazards caused by the closing of any existing sites, and the Governors of these States have threatened to do that if this is not resolved.

Beatty, NV, is one of only three sites that remains to accept all the low-level waste being generated commercially in the United States.

The Governors of the three sited States offered a compromise proposal extending the closing date for their sites in return for ratification of the regional compacts and many other guarantees.

There must be volume caps on the amount of waste accepted at Beatty, Hanford, and Barnwell, as well as an enforceable timetable for other States to license and construct new regional low-level waste facilities. Recent experience has shown that milestones must be met and penalties must be enforced against States which fail to comply with those milestones. If this is not made part of the law, another 6 years will pass and new low-level waste sites will still be under debate in State legislatures instead of under construction.

Mr. Speaker, Nevada, South Carolina, and Washington have done their fair share in bearing the full burden for this Nation's low-level nuclear waste, and it is now time for all States to enter into regional compact agreements or construct their own State facilities.

Mr. Speaker, Congress must not neglect its responsibility, and I urge immediate passage of this legislation.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUJAN. Further reserving the right to object, and this will be the last time I do so, I would yield to my friend, the gentleman from Utah [Mr. NIELSON].

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would just add my congratulations to the chairmen and ranking members of all the committees involved, and I would also like to give special commendation to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY], the gentleman from California [Mr. MOORHEAD], and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SWIFT] who fashioned this in the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, and I fully support it.

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL]?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 working days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 1083, the legislation just adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. MICHEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I take this time for the purpose of inquiring of the distinguished majority leader where we are and where we are going and, more importantly, when are we quitting?

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, in response to the question of the minority leader, the situation is this:

As most Members probably know, the conferees have completed their work on the reconciliation bill. As some Members may not know, the other body either is now voting or has just completed voting on the adoption of the conference committee report.

Immediately upon its completion and its receipt in the House, the Committee on Rules is to begin meeting and prepare to report a rule. The rule will come forthwith immediately to the House Chamber and we will vote on the rule and then, presumably, upon the conference report itself.

I suppose, although this may not be completely parliamentary, I should disclose to our colleagues what I expect the rule will contain. In view of the earlier conversations on the House floor at the time we asked for the privilege of reporting the rule and having it considered on the same day, Members will be interested to know I expect that the rule will contain a self-enacting provision by which, upon agreement to the rule, it will be deemed that the conference committee report has excised out that provision with reference the financing of the Superfund. In regard to the other matter which was under discussion, it is my understanding that it is not necessary for the Committee on Rules to include any provision in its rule respecting the question of teenage pregnancies or the collateral question of abortion in that the conferees themselves, hearing of the controversy on the House floor, elected to exclude that provision in its entirety from the conference report.

That is all that I have to tell the Members. I think if we stuck around close, however, we might anticipate that there would be a vote on the House floor.

Looking one step further and anticipating the possible, if the House should agree to the rule as proposed by the Committee on Rules, and further, if the House should agree to the proposal contained in the rule, it would go to the Senate. If the Senate still is in session, as I would hope under those circumstances it would be, then it would be up to the Senate to decide whether to agree to the House position and pass that much of the reconciliation bill.

That is about all I can respond.

Mr. MICHEL. Is it not true that we are headed for a situation where both bodies will be having different versions of reconciliation and there still then will have to be a reconciliation of the two unreconciled bills, and that takes time around here, as I recall.

I would like to yield, if I might, to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. CAMPBELL]. There are four provisions which we just have to act upon, and maybe the gentleman from South Carolina would like to take us through those steps, if he will.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. CAMPBELL. If I might, first I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Under the circumstances we find ourselves in, if the Senate in fact does act and sends to us the reconciliation package, are we then subject to a severance in the Committee on Rules of the House, or do we have to take up the package as sent by the Senate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee on Rules will meet and decide upon the reconsideration; otherwise, we would have a 3-day layover.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But the question that I pose to the Chair is that under a circumstance where the other body sends to us a conference report that they have agreed upon, do we then take up the conference report as passed by the other body, or do we operate as a separate unit and take it up under our own rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules of the House, in that instance it would have to lay over 3 days. That is why the Committee on Rules would be meeting.

□ 1935

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Rules Committee would have to waive the law over the 3 days; is that correct?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They would contain that in their rule for us to adopt.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Would they then have to take up all of the provisions in the bill or would they only be allowed to take up part?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot speak for the Rules Committee. That would be up to the Rules Committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But it is the decision of the Rules Committee, and it is not a situation that we find ourselves in under regular parliamentary situations where we would have to take up a provision sent to us from the other body?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule itself would have to address that situation. That would be under the jurisdiction of the Rules Committee and their judgment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Would we ordinarily have to have a rule to take up a conference committee report from the other body?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would answer the gentleman that unless the rule is laid over for 3 days, yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I thank the Chair very much and appreciate his answer to my inquiry.

Mr. MICHEL. I continue to yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I have a bill here that would address the issues that are expiring. There is no question that there would be a loss of revenue. There is no question but I believe that in this House, we do not wish to have a loss of revenue.

I do think that the reconciliation matter should be addressed. But I do not think that we should take a risk of losing the type of revenue that we are speaking of should there be an expiration of these items.

I do not think we are interested in seeing the tobacco tax expire. I do not think we are interested in seeing people having to pay more for Medicare payments because of our inaction.

For that reason, we do have in hand legislation that we will be prepared to send forward. I am not offering that under any circumstances. I think that we should take up the reconciliation package, but we do stand ready to do that, and I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest that it would be the purpose of the leadership, after we have acted upon the reconciliation bill, to entertain consideration of just those provisions.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But that would be after the consideration of reconciliation?

Mr. WRIGHT. That is the way we have it planned. In fact, we have a rule already recommended by the Rules Committee that will allow that to be done.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the gentleman would yield, I would ask if I might inquire would that be an extension of current law or would there be an attempt to write new law under that circumstance?

Mr. WRIGHT. Perhaps the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, could respond to that question.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, actually we have two bills, one the extension of the provisions until December 31, 1985, under current law. The other bill is the extension until March 15. I am not sure about the date, but I think it is March 15 under the provisions of the Tax Reform Act that was passed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That would be, then, under the Tax Reform Act as passed, that would be a straight extension, if I may inquire, of the cigarette tax which would extend at 16 cents with no earmarking, but a straight extension?

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. That is correct.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Would the other provisions in that include the extension of the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program, and would the extension of borrowing authority under the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act as passed be a part of that?

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And an extension of Medicare hospital and physician payments, would that be extended as we have passed that?

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I thank the gentleman for his answers.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. If the gentleman will yield, I want to correct a statement that I just made to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. CAMPBELL].

As I understand it, the extension is as agreed under the reconciliation package, the extension on physician reimbursement.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is not current law under that particular provision?

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. That is correct.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I would like, if I might, before we go any further, to advise the House that the administration has taken a strong position in opposition to enactment of H.R. 3128 on the grounds of the Trade Adjustment Assistance Act tariff, the Offshore Lands Act, section 8(g), and AFDC, Medicaid and food stamps quality control revisions, and the first part of that is part of the amendment which I offered several years ago, and felt very strongly about implementing that particular provision and having it gutted. The expansion of Medicare programs, the elimination of Medicare cost saving regulations, Medicaid programs expansions which will increase State and Federal costs, and the value-added tax.

So those are reasons that the administration would give, if this thing were possibly to pass, for vetoing the legislation. It seems a little bit ridiculous, then, to be spending the time around here spinning our wheels.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the distinguished minority whip, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT].

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, following up on the gentleman's remarks, I just wonder how many Members really understand what is being said here. Do we realize that we are beginning now to head toward being in session tomorrow? We have a general mess on our hands.

How many of you think it is time to wrap this thing up and go home sine die? I just hope that if we are going to do anything further, we will do it very quickly and wrap this thing up and get out of here.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I am happy to yield to my distinguished friend from Texas.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I think it is obvious that all of the Members are anxious to conclude our labors. I think it is important, however, that we take a stand right now whether we are willing to stay in just an hour or two longer and achieve the honest-to-God savings which are included in the reconciliation bill.

Now the other body has just now passed that conference report by a vote of 78 to 1. Surely the Members of the House, having marched up the hill talking about saving money and reducing deficits, are not now going to adjourn and leave that potential saving dangling without at least trying to pass what we can in the House.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

A moment ago, the distinguished majority leader said that when the reconciliation conference report comes to the floor it will be under a rule that excises from that the Superfund revenue-raising provisions. I would like to ask the majority leader why that is. I happen to have heard, and the information I have received on what the conferees have agreed on on Superfund funding happens to be something that I strongly favor, and I think makes an awful lot of sense, and I am wondering why we are taking that out and cutting that off.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question, the reason for that is because agreeing to that seemed at the time to be the only way that we could get agreement to allow the consideration today of the conference committee report. Otherwise, Members are opposing the idea of the rule coming to us, and under those circumstances, I made the commitment, and I take the responsibility for having done so, to recommend to the Rules Committee that kind of a rule.

If the gentleman does not like that kind of rule, he is not obliged to vote for it. But that is the kind of rule that I am obliged to ask for. I think under the circumstances, we would be well advised to try as best we can to get some reconciliation bill passed.

Mr. MOORE. If the gentleman will yield further, I would simply say that I strongly support the reconciliation bill, and strongly support the provisions in there for many, many reasons. But I also support those provisions that are in the Senate version, I guess, or the conference report version on the Superfund, and I am really disappointed to see that excised. I do not understand why. I do not know who is that strong in preventing it being brought to the floor.

Mr. WRIGHT. The Rules Committee is meeting right now, and if the gentleman has a recommendation to make to the Rules Committee, I suppose they would be pleased to hear from him. But there are Members on both sides represented in the Rules Committee, and whatever rule they recommend we are going to bring to the floor, and at least give the Members an opportunity to adopt it or reject it.

I am advised that the message, even as we speak, is at the door and ready to be presented officially and formally.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] to yield at this time so that the Chair may receive a message.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3128) "An act to make changes in spending and revenue provisions for purposes of deficit reduction and program improvement, consistent with the budget process."

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] has some time remaining of his 1 minute.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the Chair and yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DAUB].

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, let me say as well, following up on what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT] said a moment ago, I do believe and appreciate the expectation of a rule which, in fact, does excise or remove from reconciliation, which I otherwise would support, the consideration of the question of the method by which Superfund shall be financed, and it is for that reason, as I understand it, that indeed the matter ought to be considered in a conference on Superfund, and not otherwise, and I appreciate the gentleman's time.

Mr. MICHEL. I think the gentleman's comments are very appropriate.

Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to clarify that the conference report that the other body passed by a 78-to-1 margin was totally agreed to. There are no items in disagreement in this conference on the House or the Senate side.

Second, I guess I would like to ask a question to follow on to what the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. CAMPBELL] asked. Since the other body has passed the conference report, does the Rules Committee have the authority to excise one part of that conference report, or must they give us a rule that allows us to vote on that?

If the answer to that is that they can excise it, I would ask our leadership could the Rules Committee, in the interest of time, report out two rules so that if the first one fails, you do not have to go back to the Rules Committee to have a vote up or down on the conference report?

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, the Rules Committee has just reported out a rule a moment ago that does excise the Superfund out automatically when the rule passes.

What I would suggest is that we deal with this rule, and if it becomes necessary to get another rule, we will do it at that time.

Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Well, how long would that take?

Mr. MICHEL. Right.

Mr. DERRICK. We have been known to produce rules in 5 or 6 minutes sometimes.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, might I also inquire on that second rule, would it not take a two-thirds vote?

Mr. DERRICK. No, I do not think so.

Mr. MICHEL. On what grounds does the gentleman give me that kind of a response?

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, we passed a resolution out of the Rules Committee last night that was voted on this morning that allowed us to do it by a majority. Which rule is the gentleman talking about?

Mr. MICHEL. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JONES] for a parliamentary inquiry.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, as a parliamentary inquiry, I would like to ask the Speaker if the rule reported out of the Rules Committee should fail, can a new rule be brought up immediately and be passed out by only a majority vote, or does it require a two-thirds vote?

Mr. DERRICK. I regret that I do not know the answer to that question right at the moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma please restate his inquiry.

Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the inquiry is if the rule is defeated, can you bring a new rule out immediately and pass it requiring only a majority vote?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. House Resolution 342 adopted earlier today provides that "During the remainder of the first session of the 99th Congress, the requirement of clasue 4(b) of rule XI for a two-thirds vote to consider a report from the Committee on Rules on the same day reported is hereby waived against any resolution with respect to a conference report on the bill in question, H.R. 3128.

Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. So it just takes a majority vote?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Absolutely, for another rule on that conference report.

□ 1950

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I would simply reflect. however, that there were a lot of Members on this floor who would have defeated that very rule a little while ago if we did not have a guarantee that no resolution would come to this floor that did not excise that language.

There is going to be a tremendous break of faith with a lot of Members on this floor by the leadership of the other side if in fact a rule comes to the floor that does not excise VAT at any point.

That only reason why the rule that was just mentioned by the Chair was passed is because that agreement was made. If that agreement is not adhered to, I would have to say that it will be a direct break of faith with a lot of Members who were on the floor at the time it was taking place.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. MICHEL. Yes, I am happy to yield to the majority leader.

Mr. WRIGHT. In view of the comment just made, I think it ought to be reported; if it is necessary to report, though I should surely hope it would not be necessary, that there be no breach of faith.

The commitment was that I would personally seek that rule. I have sought that rule. The rule has been granted. It is coming to the House in precisely the manner that was agreed upon, so there is no breach of faith.

Now, whatever the House does is another matter. I have kept faith and done exactly what I said I would do, and the Rules Committee has done it as well.

Mr. DAUB. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DAUB. So I understand the Chair's announcement of the prior vote, the language of the vote that allowed the waiver of the two-thirds requirement was worded in such a way that any subsequent rule out of the Rules Committee to be filed and reported to be acted upon today does not require it? It applies to all rules coming out of the Committee on Rules?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct, on the reconciliation conference report under the language of the resolution adopted by the House, the will of the House——

Mr. DAUB. That was not the understanding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We are talking of only this conference report, now; any rule on this conference report.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. DAUB. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, if it is only on this conference report, then is the construction of the Chair that a series of rules that have to do with this conference report——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Any resolution on this conference report was covered under the language adopted by this House.

Mr. DERRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that that applies to any rule that comes out today dealing with reconciliation only; not any rule that comes out of the Rules Committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is what the Chair stated, on the conference report.

Mr. MICHEL. Well, there is no question but that that is exactly what we were talking about, was a rule, and that having to do with reconciliation. That was not a blanket——

Mr. DERRICK. Well, that was the answer that I gave you to the first question that the gentleman asked me about 5 minutes ago, which is the same thing; yes, it is covered. Both of the rules, if one rule comes out on reconciliation, it is necessary for another rule. The majority rule applies to both rules.

Mr. MICHEL. Well, I was not on the floor and was watching it on the monitor, having agreed earlier to that proposition, but it certainly was not our understanding that it was for anything other than that particular rule for that reconciliation proposition.

Mr. SOLOMON. Would the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SOLOMON. With all due respects to the majority leader, I would just like to recall the situation that led to the agreement by the majority leader from Texas.

Mr. HENRY HYDE and I were standing at that door, and we were lobbying for "no" votes and we were being successful with both Democrats and Republicans as they came through.

Myself on the value added tax, and Mr. HYDE on the abortion issue. About that time, the majority leader approached both of us and made the arrangement that he would seek a rule that would remove the value added tax and the abortion language; the abortion language not having been removed yet at that time by the conference.

Consequently, the both of us left the floor; we came down, we talked to our colleagues on this side of the aisle, and they agreed not to vote against the rule, for that very reason, against that piece of legislation.

Now, I do consider it a breach of faith; I am certain that between myself and others that we could have defeated that legislation, and we would not be in this position today.

I would suggest that the majority leader meet with the minority leader and our whip to work this out so that the hard feelings do not exist.

Mr. DAUB. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, I must say—I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I must say to my colleagues that I was party to what I thought was an understanding with my friend from Texas, Mr. WRIGHT, the majority leader, and I at the very least must indicate my disappointment, for it was not my understanding that in the other rule that had to do with reconciliation could be used as a method of maneuvering around the agreement which I thought was that no fat would be considered with respect to the financing mechanism of Superfund.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am going to try to answer definitively one time only; I do not want to prolong this conversation, but because our word is very important in this process, I think it is desirable to say one more time, and to be absolutely precise in what was committed and what has been fulfilled; obviously, manifestly, I am powerless to make a commitment with respect to what all the Members of this House are going to do. I have long since discovered that they are not just waiting with bated breath to discover what JIM WRIGHT said they would all do.

Everybody here is an independent agent, and I think the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Nebraska not only recognize but appreciate that fact.

Now, what I committed to them to do was to seek a rule pursuant to the vote that was then being taken and the proposition already had been presented; the text of the rule on which we were voting already long since had been laid out before the House. I was not seeking to alter that text.

I do not think anybody understood me to be altering the text of that rule.

What I committed to do was to seek and do my best to obtain a rule from the Rules Committee that does precisely what the rule does. I did that, the Rules Committee has granted, or recommended that rule.

If we will conclude this discussion, that rule will be before us, immediately, very quickly. That commitment has been fulfilled in letter and in spirit. That is all I could commit, and I have fulfilled it.

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. DAUB. I will say to the distinguished majority leader that indeed, I certainly appreciate his explanation of what he thought the understanding was to have been.

My understanding of what I thought we were attempting to achieve was that in all matters pertinent to reconciliation and the rule in singular fashion to be granted there would not be a rule allowed to be brought before the House if a VAT were contained in it.

That was my understanding, and based upon it I changed my vote from "no" to "yes."

Mr. FRENZEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FRENZEL. I would like to invite the attention of the assemblage to one of the major reasons why the Rules Committee has granted a rule excising the VAT from the report.

It has been apparent over the last week, and absolutely emphatic today, that a reconciliation bill containing a VAT will be subject to a very quick veto from the President, and those who believe that their useful purpose in staying around here so that we pass a reconciliation ought to be advised that if you pass one with a VAT in it, that is, if you defeat the rule that is pending before us, there will be no reconciliation.

I am as anxious to get out of here as anybody; I believe the Congress has stayed here 30 days too long already.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. SCHUMER. Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

We have an hour's debate on the rule. All of this debate is relevant to whether there should be a rule or not.

I move that this debate end and we go to regular order and begin debate on the rule, and debate that for the hour so we can get out of here at a reasonable hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not necessary.

The gentleman's 1 minute has expired.

Subtitle B—Tobacco Program Improvements

SEC. 1101. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the maintenance of a viable tobacco price support and production adjustment program is in the interests of tobacco producers, purchasers of tobacco, persons employed directly or indirectly by the tobacco industry, and the localities and States whose economies and tax bases are dependent on the tobacco industry;

(2) the present tobacco price support program is in jeopardy and in need of reform;

(3) under present law, the levels of price support for tobacco have resulted in market prices for tobacco that are not competitive on the world market;

(4) as a consequence, extremely large quantities of domestic tobacco have been put under loan and placed in the inventories of the producer-owned cooperative marketing associations that administer the tobacco price support program;

(5) the increased inventories have led to a significant increase in the assessments producers are required to pay to maintain the tobacco price support program on a "no net cost" basis;

(6) such increasingly large assessments are creating a severe hardship on producers;

(7) the existence of such large inventories poses a threat to the orderly marketing of future crops of tobacco;

(8) inventories of producer associations must be significantly reduced or the tobacco price support program will collapse;

(9) the Commodity Credit Corporation is threatened with substantial losses on disposition of these inventories should the tobacco price support program collapse;

(10) it is imperative that such excess inventories of tobacco be disposed of, under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, in a manner that—

(A) will not disrupt the orderly marketing of new tobacco crops;

(B) will minimize any losses to the Federal Government; and

(C) will be fair and equitable to all tobacco producers and purchasers;

(11) the mutual cooperation of tobacco producers, tobacco purchasers, producer associations, and the Secretary of Agriculture is necessary—

(A) to restore the tobacco price support program to a stable condition; and

(B) to prevent substantial losses to taxpayers that would result from the collapse of the program;

(12) restoration of stability to the tobacco price support program through a sharing of the cost of that program by purchasers of tobacco along with producers of tobacco is necessary to prevent undue burdens on, or obstruction of, interstate and foreign commerce in tobacco; and

(13) the system of grading tobacco should be thoroughly reviewed to ensure that grades are assigned to tobacco that properly state the quality of such tobacco.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this subtitle are—

(1) to encourage cooperation among tobacco producers, tobacco purchasers, and the Secretary of Agriculture in reducing tobacco price support levels, assessment costs, the size of inventories of producer associations, and the exposure of taxpayers to large budget outlays;

(2) to adjust the method by which price support levels and production quotas are calculated to reflect actual market conditions;

(3) to facilitate the purchase and sale of Flue-cured and Burley tobacco presently in the inventories of producer associations through which producers of Flue-cured and Burley tobacco are provided price support;

(4) to provide that purchasers and producers of domestic tobacco share equally in the cost of maintaining the tobacco price support program at no net cost to the taxpayers; and

(5) to expedite reform of the system of grading tobacco so that grades assigned to tobacco more accurately reflect the quality of such tobacco.

SEC. 1102. PRICE SUPPORT ADJUSTMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Effective for the 1985 and subsequent crops of tobacco, section 106(f) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1445(f)) is amended by striking out paragraphs (4) and (5) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(4) For the 1985 and 1986 crops of Burley tobacco, the support level shall be $1.488 per pound.

"(5) For the 1986 crop of Flue-cured tobacco, the support level shall be $1.438 per pound.

"(6)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), for the 1986 and each subsequent crop of any kind of tobacco (other than Flue-cured and Burley tobacco) for which marketing quotas are in effect or are not disapproved by producers, the support level shall be the level in cents per pound at which the immediately preceding crop was supported, plus or minus, respectively, the amount by which—

"(i) the support level for the crop for which the determination is being made, as determined under subsection (b); is greater or less than

"(ii) the support level for the immediately preceding crop, as determined under subsection (b), as that difference may be adjusted by the Secretary under subsection (d) if the support level under clause (i) is greater than the support level under clause (ii).

"(B) Notwithstanding subparagraph (A) and subsection (d), if requested by the board of directors of an association through which price support for the respective kind of tobacco specified in subparagraph (A) is made available to producers, the Secretary may reduce the support level for such kind of tobacco to the extent requested by the association to more accurately reflect the market value and improve the marketability of such tobacco.

"(7)(A) For the 1987 and each subsequent crop of Flue-cured and Burley tobacco for which marketing quotas are in effect or are not disapproved by producers, the support level shall be the level in cents per pound at which the immediately preceding crop was supported, plus or minus, respectively, an adjustment of not less than 65 percent nor more than 100 percent of the total, as determined by the Secretary after taking into consideration the supply of the kind of tobacco involved in relation to demand, of—

"(i) 66.7 percent of the amount by which—

"(I) the average price received by producers for Flue-cured and Burley tobacco, respectively, on the United States auction markets, as determined by the Secretary, during the 5 marketing years immediately preceding the marketing year for which the determination is being made, excluding the year in which the average price was the highest and the year in which the average price was the lowest in such period, is greater or less than

"(II) the average price received by producers for Flue-cured and Burley tobacco, respectively, on the United States auction markets, as determined by the Secretary, during the 5 marketing years immediately preceding the marketing year prior to the marketing year for which the determination is being made, excluding the year in which the average price was the highest and the year in which the average price was the lowest in such period; and

"(ii) 33.3 percent of the change, expressed as a cost per pound of tobacco, in the index of prices paid by tobacco producers from January 1 to December 31 of the calendar year immediately preceding the year in which the determination is made.

"(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A)—

"(i) the average market price for Burley tobacco for the 1985 marketing year shall be reduced by $0.039 per pound;

"(ii) the average market price for Burley tobacco for the 1984 and each prior applicable marketing year shall be reduced by $0.30 per pound;

"(iii) the average market price for Flue-cured tobacco for the 1985 marketing year shall be reduced by $0.25 per pound;

"(iv) the average market price for Flue-cured tobacco for the 1984 and each prior applicable marketing year shall be reduced by $0.30 per pound; and

"(v) the index of prices paid by tobacco producers shall include items representing general, variable costs of producing tobacco, as determined by the Secretary, but shall not include the cost of land, risk, overhead, management, purchase or leasing of quotas, marketing contributions or assessments, and other costs not directly related to the production of tobacco.".

(b) CERTAIN GRADES OF FLUE-CURED TOBACCO.—Effective for the 1986 and subsequent crops of tobacco, section 106 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1445) is further amended by striking out subsection (g).

"(ii) the average annual quantity of Burley tobacco exported from the United States during the 3 marketing years immediately preceding the marketing year for which the determination is being made; and

"(iii) the quantity, if any, of Burley tobacco that the Secretary, in the discretion of the Secretary, determines is necessary to increase or decrease the inventories of the producer-owned cooperative marketing associations that have entered into loan agreements with the Commodity Credit Corporation to make price support available to producers of Burley tobacco to establish or maintain such inventories, in the aggregate, at the reserve stock level for Burley tobacco.

"(B) In determining the quantity of Burley tobacco necessary to establish or maintain the inventories of the producer associations at the reserve stock level under subparagraph (A)(iii)—

"(i) the Secretary shall provide for initially attaining the reserve stock level over a period of 5 years; and

"(ii) any downward adjustment in such inventories of Burley tobacco may not exceed the greater of—

"(I) 35,000,000 pounds; or

"(II) 50 percent of the quantity by which—

"(B) 90 percent of the quantity of intended purchases of such kinds of tobacco, respectively, submitted by the manufacturer or established by the Secretary for such manufacturer for that marketing year under section 320A (as that quantity may be reduced under subsection (b)(2)).

"(d)(1) An amount equivalent to the penalty collected by the Secretary under this section shall be transmitted by the Secretary to the appropriate producer-owned cooperative marketing association that has entered into a loan agreement with the Commodity Credit Corporation to make price support available to producers of Flue-cured or Burley tobacco, as the case may be.

"(2) Each association to which amounts are transmitted by the Secretary under this section shall deposit such amounts in the No Net Cost Fund or Account of such association in accordance with section 106A or 106B of the Agricultural Act of 1949.

"(e) The limitations on disclosure set forth in subsections (c) and (d) of section 320A shall apply to information submitted by domestic manufacturers of cigarettes under this section with respect to the quantity of purchases of Flue-cured and Burley quota tobacco during a marketing year. Any officer or employee of the Department of Agriculture who violates such limitations on disclosure shall be subject to the penalties set forth in section 320A(c)(4).

SEC. 1109. PURCHASE OF INVENTORY STOCK.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in order to reduce or eliminate the excessive inventories of Flue-cured and Burley tobacco held by associations from the 1976 through 1984 crops, and in order to provide for the orderly disposition of such excessive inventories of tobacco in a manner that will not disrupt the orderly marketing of new tobacco crops and will minimize any losses to the Federal Government:

(a) SALE OF INVENTORY STOCK.—(1) The producer-owned cooperative marketing association that has entered into a loan agreement with the Commodity Credit Corporation to make price support available to producers of Flue-cured tobacco shall offer to sell the stocks of Flue-cured tobacco of the association from the 1976 through 1984 crops as provided in this section.

(2) Each producer-owned cooperative marketing association that has entered into a loan agreement with the Commodity Credit Corporation to make price support available to producers of Burley tobacco shall offer to sell its stocks of Burley tobacco from the 1982 and 1984 crops as provided in this section.

(3)(A)(i) Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this subtitle, the Commodity Credit Corporation shall acquire title to the Burley tobacco from the 1983 crop that is pledged as security for loans on such tobacco by calling the loans on such tobacco.

(ii) The Corporation shall, then, offer such tobacco for sale at such times, in such quantities, and subject to such conditions as the Corporation considers appropriate.

(B) If the Commodity Credit Corporation has not sold all of the stocks of the 1983 crop of Burley tobacco within 2 years from the date the Corporation calls the loans on such tobacco, the Corporation may offer to sell to domestic manufacturers of cigarettes the remaining stocks of such tobacco as provided in this section.

(b) SALE PRICES.—(1)(A) The stocks of Flue-cured tobacco from the 1976 through 1984 crops shall be offered for sale at the base prices, including carrying charges, in effect as of the date of the offer, reduced by—

(B) The purchasers of the stocks of Flue-cured tobacco from the 1976 through 1984 crops shall pay the full carrying charges that have accrued to such tobacco from the date of the offer made under this section to the date that such tobacco is removed from the inventory of the association.

(2)(A) The stocks of Burley tobacco from the 1982 crop shall be offered for sale at the listed base price in effect as of July 1, 1985.

(B) The stocks of Burley tobacco from the 1984 crop shall be offered for sale at the costs of the association for such tobacco as of the date of enactment of this subtitle.

(3)(A) After the 2-year period specified in subsection (a)(3)(B) has expired, if the Commodity Credit Corporation offers to sell the stocks of the Corporation of Burley tobacco from the 1983 crop to domestic manufacturers of cigarettes, such stocks shall be offered for sale at the costs of the association, including carrying charges, as of the date on which the Corporation calls the loans on such tobacco, reduced by 90 percent.

(B) Neither tobacco producers nor tobacco purchasers shall be responsible for carrying charges that accrue to the 1983 crop Burley tobacco after the date on which the Commodity Credit Corporation calls the loans on such tobacco.

(c) TERMS OF AGREEMENTS.—(1)(A) Each domestic manufacturer of cigarettes may enter into agreements to purchase inventory stocks of Flue-cured and Burley tobacco, in accordance with this section.

(B) To be eligible for the reductions in price specified in this section, such manufacturer shall enter into such agreements as soon as practicable, but not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this subtitle, except that, with respect to the 1983 crop of Burley tobacco, if the Corporation offers to sell the stocks of such tobacco pursuant to subsection (b)(3)(A), such agreements shall be entered into as soon as practicable, but not later than 90 days after the end of the 2-year period referred to in subsection (a)(3)(B).

(C)(i) Such agreements shall provide that, over a period of time, each participating domestic manufacturer of cigarettes shall purchase a percentage of the stocks of Flue-cured and Burley tobacco held—

(I) by the producer-owned cooperative marketing associations at the close of the 1984 marketing year; or

(II) in the case of the 1983 crop of Burley tobacco, by the Commodity Credit Corporation at the time the Corporation offers such tobacco for sale to domestic manufacturers of cigarettes under this section.

(ii) The period of time referred to in clause (i) may not exceed—

(I) in the case of Flue-cured tobacco, 8 years from the date of enactment of this subtitle;

(II) in the case of Burley tobacco from the 1982 and 1984 crops, 5 years from the date of enactment of this subtitle; and

(III) in the case of the 1983 crop of Burley tobacco, 5 years from the end of the 2-year period referred to in subsection (a)(3)(B).

(2)(A)(i) The percentage to be purchased by each participating manufacturer shall be at least equal to the respective percentage of the participating manufacturer of the total quantity of net cigarettes manufactured for use as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture under this paragraph on the basis of the monthly reports ("Manufacturer of Tobacco Products—Monthly Reports") submitted (on ATF Form 3068) by manufacturers of tobacco products to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms of the Department of the Treasury.

(ii) The Secretary of Agriculture shall request from the Secretary of the Treasury copies of such monthly reports necessary to make the determinations required under this section.

(iii) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Treasury may release and disclose such information to the Secretary of Agriculture.

(B) "Net cigarettes manufactured for use" shall be computed by subtracting—

(i) the cumulative figures entered for large and small cigarettes in item 16f of ATF Form 3068 ("Reduction to tobacco"); from

(ii) the cumulative figures entered for large and small cigarettes in item 7 of such form ("Manufactured").

(C)(i) The percentage to be purchased by each participating manufacturer shall be determined—

(I) on the date of enactment of this subtitle; and

(II) annually thereafter over the course of the respective buy-out periods specified in this subsection.

(ii) Such percentage shall be determined by dividing—

(I) the average net cigarettes manufactured by a manufacturer for use for the 12-month period immediately preceding the appropriate determination date (the date of enactment of this subtitle and annually thereafter over the course of the respective buy-out periods specified in this subsection); by

(II) the aggregate average net cigarettes manufactured by all domestic cigarette manufacturers for use for such 12-month period.

(D)(i) The quantity of tobacco to be purchased by each participating manufacturer shall be determined annually.

(ii) Such quantity shall be based on—

(I) the percentage of net cigarettes of a manufacturer manufactured for use, as determined under subparagraph (C); multiplied by

(II) the appropriate annual quantity to be withdrawn from the inventories of the associations or the Commodity Credit Corporation.

(iii) The appropriate annual quantity to be withdrawn from inventories shall be—

(I) 12½ percent of the inventories of Flue-cured tobacco from the 1976 through 1984 crops on hand on the date of enactment of this subtitle;

(II) 20 percent of the inventories of Burley tobacco from the 1982 and 1984 crops on hand on the date of enactment of this subtitle; and

(III) 20 percent of the inventories of Burley tobacco from the 1983 crop held by the Commodity Credit Corporation on the date that is 2 years after the call of the loans on such tobacco by the Corporation.

(E) Any purchases by a manufacturer from the inventories of the associations or from the Commodity Credit Corporation for a crop covered by this section in any year of the buy-out period that exceed the quantity of the purchases of the manufacturer required under the agreement, as determined under this section, shall be applied against future purchases required of such manufacturer.

(3) In carrying out this section, manufacturers may confer with one another and, separately or collectively, with associations, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Commodity Credit Corporation, as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out this section and the purposes of this subtitle.

(d) APPROVAL OF AGREEMENTS.—(1)(A) Each agreement entered into under this section shall be submitted to the Secretary of Agriculture for review and approval.

(B) In the case of an agreement to purchase tobacco from the inventory of a producer association, the agreement shall be submitted by the association.

(C) No agreement may become effective until approved by the Secretary.

(2) The Secretary of Agriculture shall not approve any agreement submitted under this section unless the Secretary has determined that—

(A) the agreement—

(ii) is otherwise consistent with the purposes of this subtitle; and

(B) the price and other terms of sale are uniform and nondiscriminatory among various purchasers.

(e) DISCLOSURE.—The limitations on disclosure set forth in subsections (c) and (d) of section 320A of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 (as added by section 1103(d)) shall apply to information submitted by domestic manufacturers of cigarettes under this section with respect to net cigarettes manufactured for use, including information provided on ATF Form 3068. Any officer or employee of the Department of Agriculture who violates such limitations on disclosure shall be subject to the penalties set forth in section 320A(c)(4) of such Act.

(ii) the extent to which the number of grades of tobacco affects the operation of the grading system; and

(iii) the competence and independence of tobacco graders.

(2) The Secretary shall also study the feasibility and desirability of—

(A) providing for a grade that would be used to designate tobacco that is of such poor quality as a result of a natural disaster as to affect substantially the marketability of such tobacco; and

(B) establishing a price support level, if any, for such tobacco that may be adjusted by the Secretary as necessary to facilitate the sale of such tobacco and protect the no net cost funds or accounts.

(b) REPORT.—(1) Not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this subtitle, the Secretary of Agriculture shall report the results of the studies required under subsection (a), together with any recommendations for necessary legislation, to the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate.

(2) As soon as practicable after submission of the report required under paragraph (1), but not later than the opening of the marketing season for the 1986 crop of Flue-cured tobacco, the Secretary shall implement any recommendations made in such report that may be implemented by the Secretary under existing authority.

SEC. 6001. BOATING SAFETY FUND.

An amount equal to one-third of the amount transferred for fiscal year 1985 to the Boat Safety Account under section 9503(c)(4) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (26 U.S.C. 9503(c)(4)) shall be deposited in the general fund of the Treasury as proprietary receipts of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating and ascribed to Coast Guard activities. Section 13106(a) of title 46, United States Code, shall be applied with respect to fiscal year 1985 by substituting "one-third" for "two-thirds" in the first sentence.

Subtitle B—NOAA Nautical and Aeronautical Products

SEC. 6011. SALE AND DISTRIBUTION OF NOAA NAUTICAL AND AERONAUTICAL PRODUCTS.

(a) Section 1307 of title 44, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§1307. National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration: nautical and aeronautical products, sale and distribution

"(a)(1) All nautical and aeronautical products created or published by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration shall be sold at such prices as the Secretary of Commerce shall establish annually, in accordance with the provisions of this subsection. The Secretary shall publish annually the prices at which nautical and aeronautical products are sold to the public.

"(2)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, the prices of nautical and aeronautical products may be increased over a period of not less than three years after the date of enactment of this section so as to recover all costs attributable to data base management, compilation, printing, and distribution of such products. The prices of such products may be maintained to recover all such costs thereafter. At the end of such period and every three years thereafter, the Secretary, after consultation with the Secretary of Transportation, shall report to the Congress on the effect of imposing or maintaining such increased prices, including any impact on aviation and marine safety.

"(B) The Secretary, after consultation with the Secretary of Transportation, shall adjust the prices of nautical or aeronautical products in such manner as is necessary to avoid any adverse impact on aviation and marine safety attributable to the prices specified in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.

"(3) This section shall not be construed to require the establishment of any price for a nautical or aeronautical product where, in the judgment of the Secretary, furnishing of that product to a recipient is a reasonable exchange for voluntary contribution of information by the recipient to a program of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

"(4) Prices established under this section may not include costs attributable to the acquisition or processing of nautical or aeronautical data.

"(b) Fees collected from the sale of nautical or aeronautical products under this section and from any licensing of such products which is permitted under any other provision of law shall be deposited in the miscellaneous receipts fund of the United States Treasury.

"(c) The Secretary may distribute nautical and aeronautical products—

"(1) without charge to each foreign government or international organization with which the Secretary or a Federal department or agency has an agreement for exchange of these products without cost; and

"(2) at prices which the Secretary establishes, to the departments and officers of the United States requiring them for official use.

"(d) The fees provided for in this section are for the purpose of reimbursing the United States Government for the costs of creating, publishing or distributing aeronautical and nautical products of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. The collection of fees authorized by this section shall not alter or expand any duty or liability of the United States under existing law for the performance of functions for which fees are collected, nor shall the collection of fees constitute an express or implied undertaking by the United States to perform any activity in a certain manner.

"(e) For purposes of this section, the term 'nautical and aeronautical products' includes all nautical and aeronautical charts, tide and tidal current tables, tidal current charts, coast pilots, water level products, and associated data bases which are created or published by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.".

(b) The item relating to section 1307 in the analysis of chapter 13 of title 44, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"1307. National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration: nautical and aeronautical products, sale and distribution.".

Subtitle C—Foreign Fishing Permit Fees

SEC. 6021. FOREIGN FISHING PERMIT FEES.

Paragraph (10) of section 204(b) of the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act (16 U.S.C. 1824(b)(10)) is amended to read as follows:

"(10) FEES.—(A) Fees shall be paid to the Secretary by the owner or operator of any foreign fishing vessel for which a permit is issued pursuant to this subsection. The Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of State, shall establish a schedule of such fees which shall apply nondiscriminatorily to each foreign nation.

"(B) Unless subparagraph (C) applies, the fees imposed under subparagraph (A) shall be at least in an amount sufficient to return to the United States an amount which bears to the total cost of carrying out the provisions of this Act during each fiscal year the same ratio as the aggregate quantity of fish harvested by foreign fishing vessels within the fishery conservation zone during the preceding year bears to the aggregate quantity of fish harvested by both foreign and domestic fishing vessels within such zone and the territorial waters of the United States during such preceding year.

"(C) If the Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of State, finds that any foreign nation receiving an allocation under section 201(e)—

"(i) is harvesting anadromous species of United States origin at a level that is unacceptable to the Secretary; or

"(ii) is failing to take sufficient action to benefit the conservation and development of United States fisheries;

the fees imposed under subparagraph (A) for the next fiscal year shall be at least in an amount sufficient to return to the United States an amount which bears to the total cost of carrying out the provisions of this Act during that fiscal year the same ratio as the aggregate quantity of fish harvested by foreign fishing vessels within the fishery conservation zone during the preceding year bears to the aggregate quantity of fish harvested by both foreign and domestic fishing vessels within such zone during such preceding year. If the Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of State, finds, at any time during a fiscal year in which fees calculated under this subparagraph are in effect with respect to a foreign nation, that the conditions requiring that calculation no longer exist, the fees imposed under this paragraph with respect to that nation for the remainder of the fiscal year shall be calculated under subparagraph (B).

"(D) Before the end of each fiscal year, the Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of State, shall review, based on the criteria established in subparagraph (C)(i) and (ii), the performance of every nation receiving an allocation under section 201(e) and provide written notice to the Congress of his findings and reasons therefor before the end of the fiscal year.

"(E) For purposes of this paragraph, the total cost of carrying out the provisions of this Act includes, but is not limited to, fishery conservation and management, fisheries research, administration, and enforcement, but excludes costs for observers covered by surcharges under section 201(i)(4).

"(F)(i) The amounts collected by the Secretary under this paragraph (except the amounts referred to in clause (ii)) shall be transferred to the fisheries loan fund established under section 4 of the Fish and Wildlife Act of 1956 (16 U.S.C. 742(c)) for so long as such fund exists and used for the purpose of making loans therefrom, but only to the extent and in amounts provided for in advance in appropriation Acts.

"(ii) The Secretary shall deposit into the general fund of the United States Treasury the difference between the amounts collected under subparagraph (C) and the amounts that would have been collected from such nations had that subparagraph not been enacted.".

SEC. 6032. OCEAN AND COASTAL RESOURCES MANAGEMENT AND DEVELOPMENT FUND.

(a) There is established in the Treasury of the United States a fund to be known as the Ocean and Coastal Resources Management and Development Fund.

(b)(1) Subject to the limitations in paragraph (2), for each fiscal year after fiscal year 1987, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deposit into the Fund, not later than 60 days after the end of the previous fiscal year, an amount equal to 20 per centum of the amount, if any, by which the aggregate of the sums deposited into the Treasury of the United States pursuant to section 9 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1338) during the previous fiscal year exceeded $5,000,000,000.

(2) The amount in the Fund at any time during a fiscal year may not exceed the following maximum amount:

(A) During fiscal year 1988, $150,000,000.

(B) During fiscal year 1989, $300,000,000.

(C) During fiscal year 1990, an amount equal to 105 percent of the maximum amount specified under subparagraph (B).

(D) During each fiscal year after fiscal year 1990, an amount equal to 105 percent of the maximum amount applicable under this paragraph for the immediately preceding fiscal year.

(c) As provided in advance by appropriation Acts, the Secretary shall use the total amount of any amounts deposited in the Fund during each fiscal year to carry out the purposes of, and in accordance with, section 6033.

SEC. 6033. NATIONAL OCEAN AND COASTAL RESOURCES MANAGEMENT AND DEVELOPMENT BLOCK GRANTS.

(a) Subject to the provisions of section 6032(c) and this section, for fiscal year 1988 and for each subsequent fiscal year, the Secretary shall provide to each state a national ocean and coastal resources management and development block grant from amounts in the Fund.

(b)(1) No state may receive a block grant for a fiscal year unless such state has submitted to the Secretary a report for such fiscal year that—

(A) specifies the proposed allocation by such state of the block grant among coastal zone management activities, coastal energy impact activities, living marine resource activities, and natural resource preservation, enhancement and management activities under section 6034(a); and

(B) describes each proposed activity receiving funds provided by the block grant and the amounts proposed to be expended for each activity.

(2) In order to be eligible to receive a block grant pursuant to this subtitle and before submitting the report required under paragraph (1), each state shall provide opportunities for the public to review and comment on the report and shall hold at least one public hearing on such report at a site in the state convenient for encouraging maximum public participation.

(c) A block grant shall not be paid from the Fund to a state until the state has established a trust fund for the receipt of such grant.

(d) The amount of each block grant provided under subsection (a) shall be determined by the Secretary under a formula established by the Secretary which gives equal consideration to each of the following criteria:

(1) For each state, the equal combination of—

(A) the amount of actual leasing with respect to oil and gas which is carried out under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1331 et seq.) during the previous fiscal year which occurs within the outer Continental Shelf planning area to which such state is adjacent; and

(B) the volume of oil and gas produced from outer Continental Shelf acreage leased by the Federal Government which is first landed in such state during the previous fiscal year.

(2) For each state, any proposed oil and gas lease sales specified by the outer Continental Shelf leasing program prepared under section 18(a) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1344(a)) and scheduled to occur within the outer Continental Shelf planning area to which such state is adjacent.

(3) The coastal-related energy facilities (including coal facilities) located within each state during the previous fiscal year. For any state for which the Secretary has not approved a coastal zone management program under section 306 of the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1455), this criterion shall be reduced by fifty per centum. The amounts resulting from such reduction shall be reallocated proportionately, under this paragraph, among states for which the Secretary has approved such a management program.

(4) The shoreline mileage of each state for which the Secretary has approved a coastal zone management program under section 306 of the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1455).

(5) The coastal population of each state for which the Secretary has approved a coastal zone management program under section 306 of the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1455).

(e) For purposes of paragraphs (4) and (5) of subsection (d)—

(1) the Secretary shall be presumed to have approved the coastal zone management program of any state if the Secretary determines that, in any fiscal year, such state is making satisfactory progress toward the development of a coastal zone management program which will be approvable under section 306 of the Coastal Zone Management Act (16 U.S.C. 1455). Such presumption may be renewed only once and for a period not to exceed one additional fiscal year if the Secretary makes such determination under this subsection for such additional fiscal year; and

(2) a state shall not receive in excess of 30 per centum of the amounts attributable to either criterion.

If any state would receive an allotment greater than 30 per centum, the Secretary shall reduce such allotment to 30 per centum. The amounts resulting from such reduction shall be reallocated proportionately among those states that receive less than 30 per centum of the amounts attributable to such criterion.

(f)(1) For states for which the Secretary has approved a coastal zone management program under section 306 of the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1455), a coastal state shall receive not less than one and sixty two one-hundredths per centum, and a coastal territory not less than one-half of one per centum, of the total amount available for block grants under section 6032(c) during any fiscal year.

(2) If, after the calculations required under subsection (d), any coastal state or coastal territory is to receive a block grant that is less than the respective minimum grant levels established under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall increase such state's block grant to the minimum level. Amounts necessary to make such increases shall be derived by reducing proportionately the block grant of each state which, as determined under subsection (d), exceeds the respective minimum level under paragraph (1).

(3) For the purposes of the implementation of section 6034(b), block grant levels may fall below the respective minimum levels established under this section.

(g) If, after the calculations required under subsections (d), (e) and (f), any state would receive a block grant which is greater than 15 per centum of the funds appropriated under section 6032(c), the Secretary shall reduce such state's block grant to 15 per centum. The amounts resulting from such reduction shall be reallocated proportionately among states receiving less than 15 per centum of such funds and more than the minimum grant levels under subsection (f).

(h)(1) After determining the amount of a block grant for any State for any fiscal year under subsections (d) through (g), the Secretary shall determine the final amount of that grant by deducting (but not below 0) from the amount determined under those subsections—

(A) an amount equal to 50 percent of the average annual amount of all Federal assistance received by that State under the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 during the 3 immediately preceding fiscal years; and

(B) subject to paragraph (2), an amount equal to 50 percent of the average annual amount received by that State under section 8(g) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act during the 3 immediately preceding fiscal years.

(2) In calculating the average annual amount under paragraph (1)(B) for any 3-year period that includes the year in which the state received payment under section 8004 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1985, the Secretary shall treat the state as having received, under section 8(g) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, an amount equal to 20 percent of the payment under such section 8004—

(i) for the fiscal year in which the payment under such section 8004 was received; and

(ii) for any fiscal year in the 3-year period that preceded the fiscal year referred to in clause (i).

(3) The Secretary shall deposit moneys equal to the amounts by which block grants are reduced under paragraph (1) into the general fund of the United States Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 6034. REQUIREMENTS ON THE USE OF BLOCK GRANTS.

(a) Block grants provided to a state under section 6033(a) shall be used for the enhancement and management of ocean and coastal resources and for the amelioration of any adverse impacts that result from the siting, construction, expansion, or operation of coastal-related energy facilities. Such block grants shall be used only for each of the following activities:

(1) Activities of such state authorized by the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1451 et seq.).

(2) Activities of such state pursuant to the coastal energy impact program administered under section 308 of the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1457).

(3) Activities of such state for the enhancement, management and development of living marine resources.

(4) Activities of such state for the preservation, enhancement and management of its natural resources including coastal habitats.

(b) Nothing in this subtitle shall be construed to repeal or modify, by implication or otherwise, section 312 of the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C 1461). The Secretary shall reduce any block grant, provided under this subtitle to a state that has an approved program under section 306 of the Coastal Zone Management Act (16 U.S.C. 1455), by no more than 30 per centum of the amount of such state's block grant that is attributable to paragraphs (4) and (5) of section 6033(d), if the Secretary makes the determination provided in section 312(c) of the Coastal Zone Management Act.

SEC. 6035. LOCAL GOVERNMENTS.

(a) Each state receiving a block grant in any fiscal year under section 6033(a) shall—

(1) establish an effective mechanism for consultation and coordination with its local governments with respect to the allocation of such block grant within the state; and

(2) provide to its local governments allocations from such block grant, taking into consideration the responsibilities of the local governments in carrying out activities under section 6034(a).

(b) In carrying out its responsibilities under subsection (a)(2), the state shall give particular emphasis to the activities of local governments in—

(1) providing public services and public facilities required as a result of the siting, construction, expansion, or operation of coastal-related energy facilities; and

(2) preventing, reducing, or ameliorating any unavoidable loss of valuable environmental or recreational resources if such loss results from the siting, construction, expansion, or operation of coastal-related energy facilities.

(c) In carrying out its responsibilities under this section, each state shall provide no less than 33 1/3 per centum of each block grant received under section 6033(a) to its local governments.

SEC. 6036. AUDIT.

(a) Under regulations promulgated by the Secretary, any state receiving a block grant under section 6033(a) shall, for each fiscal year that it receives such grant, provide that amounts received under this subtitle be subject to audit in accordance with chapter 75 of title 31, United States Code, and be submitted to the Secretary. The income derived from such trust fund for each fiscal year shall be included in the audit required by this section.

(b) Each audit submitted by a state under subsection (a) shall—

(1) contain a statement of all funds provided by the block grant received by such state for the fiscal year; and

(2) include a statement of all financial assistance provided to such state's local governments pursuant to section 6035.

(c) After receiving a state's financial audit under this section, the Secretary shall—

(1) make a preliminary evaluation of each audit submitted pursuant to this section. If the Secretary determines, in the preliminary evaluation of a state's audit, that all or any part of the block grant has not been used as required by this subtitle, the Secretary shall publish notice of this finding in the Federal Register. In addition, the Secretary may suspend, and place in escrow, an amount from any future block grant which is equivalent to the amount misused, pending final determination pursuant to paragraph (3);

(2) provide the state with an opportunity for a hearing; and

(3) make a final determination.

(d) If the Secretary makes a final determination under subsection (c)(3) that all or any part of such funds were not used as required by this subtitle, the Secretary shall—

(1) provide in writing to the state the reasons for the determination and the amount of funds misused; and

(2) take appropriate action to recover an amount equal to that determined to have been misused under subsection (c), including the withholding of such amount from a State's future block grant or the amount which may have been suspended under subsection (c)(1).

(e) If no appeal of the final determination is filed within sixty days following notification to the State of the final determination, any funds withheld or recovered by the Secretary under subsection (d)(2) shall be returned to the Fund.

(f) If an appeal of the final determination is filed within the sixty-day period specified in subsection (e), any funds withheld by the Secretary shall be held in escrow until such time as a final determination is made of the appeal.

SEC. 6037. RULES AND REGULATIONS.

The Secretary shall promulgate, pursuant to section 553 of title 5, United States Code, after notice and opportunity for participation by relevant Federal agencies, State agencies, local governments, regional organizations, and other interested parties, both public and private, such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this subtitle.

"(1) the Governor of the coastal state in which the area is located nominates the area for that designation; and

"(2) The Secretary finds that—

"(A) the area is a representative estuarine ecosystem that is suitable for long-term research and contributes to the biogeographical and typological balance of the System;

"(B) the law of the coastal State provides long-term protection for reserve resources to ensure a stable environment for research;

"(C) designation of the area as a reserve will serve to enhance public awareness and understanding of estuarine areas, and provide suitable opportunities for public education and interpretation; and

"(D) the coastal State in which the area is located has complied with the requirements of any regulations issued by the Secretary to implement this section.

"(c) ESTUARINE RESEARCH GUIDELINES.—The Secretary shall develop guidelines for the conduct of research within the System that shall include—

"(i) for purposes of acquiring such lands and waters, and any property interests therein, as are necessary to ensure the appropriate long-term management of an area as a national estuarine reserve,

"(ii) for purposes of operating or managing a national estuarine reserve and constructing appropriate reserve facilities, or

"(iii) for purposes of conducting educational or interpretive activities; and

"(B) to any coastal State or public or private person for purposes of supporting research and monitoring within a national estuarine reserve that are consistent with the research guidelines developed under subsection (c).

"(2) If evaluation under paragraph (1) reveals that the operation and management of the reserve is deficient, or that the research being conducted within the reserve is not consistent with the research guidelines developed under subsection (c), the Secretary may suspend the eligibility of that reserve for financial assistance under subsection (e) until the deficiency or inconsistency is remedied.

"(3) The Secretary may withdraw the designation of an estuarine area as a national estuarine reserve if evaluation under paragraph (1) reveals that—

"(A) the basis for any one or more of the findings made under subsection (b)(2) regarding that area no longer exists; or

"(B) a substantial portion of the research conducted within the area, over a period of years, has not been consistent with the research guidelines developed under subsection (c).

"(g) REPORT.—The Secretary shall include in the report required under section 316 information regarding—

"(1) new designations of national estuarine reserves;

"(2) any expansion of existing national estuarine reserves;

TITLE VIII—OUTER CONTINENTAL SHELF AND RELATED PROGRAMS

Subtitle A—Amendments to the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act

SEC. 8001. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be referred to as the "Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1985".

SEC. 8002. NATIONAL POLICY FOR THE OUTER CONTINENTAL SHELF.

The Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1331 et seq.) is amended in paragraph (4) of section 3 by deleting the word "and" at the end of subparagraph (A); deleting the semicolon at the end of subparagraph (B) and inserting in lieu thereof a period; designating subparagraph (B) as subparagraph (C); and inserting after subparagraph (A) the following new subparagraph (B):

"(B) the distribution of a portion of the receipts from the leasing of mineral resources of the outer Continental Shelf adjacent to State lands, as provided under section 8(g), will provide affected coastal States and localities with funds which may be used for the mitigation of adverse economic and environmental effects related to the development of such resources; and".

SEC. 8003. REVISION OF SECTION 8(g).

Section 8(g) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1337(g)) is amended to read as follows:

"(g)(1) At the time of soliciting nominations for the leasing of lands containing tracts wholly or partially within three nautical miles of the seaward boundary of any coastal State, and subsequently as new information is obtained or developed by the Secretary, the Secretary shall, in addition to the information required by section 26 of this Act, provide the Governor of such State—

"(A) an identification and schedule of the areas and regions proposed to be offered for leasing;

"(B) at the request of the Governor of such State, all information from all sources concerning the geographical, geological, and ecological characteristics of such tracts;

"(C) an estimate of the oil and gas reserves in the areas proposed for leasing; and

"(D) at the request of the Governor of such State, an identification of any field, geological structure, or trap located wholly or partially within three nautical miles of the seaward boundary of such coastal State, including all information relating to the entire field, geological structure, or trap.

The provisions of the first sentence of subsection (c) and the provisions of subsections (e)-(h) of section 26 of this Act shall be applicable to the release by the Secretary of any information to any coastal State under this paragraph. In addition, the provisions of subsections (c) and (e)-(h) of section 26 of this Act shall apply in their entirety to the release by the Secretary to any coastal State of any information relating to Federal lands beyond three nautical miles of the seaward boundary of such coastal State.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Secretary shall deposit into a separate account in the Treasury of the United States all bonuses, rents, and royalties, and other revenues (derived from any bidding system authorized under subsection (a)(1)), excluding Federal income and windfall profits taxes, and derived from any lease of any Federal tract which lies wholly or partially within three nautical miles of the seaward boundary of any coastal State. Except as provided in paragraph (5) of this subsection, not later than the last business day of the month following the month in which those revenues are deposited in the Treasury, the Secretary shall transmit to such coastal State 27 percent of those revenues, together with all accrued interest thereon. The remaining balance of such revenues shall be transmitted simultaneously to the miscellaneous receipts account of the United States Treasury.

"(3) Whenever the Secretary or the Governor of a coastal State determines that a common potentially hydrocarbon-bearing area may underlie the Federal and State boundary, the Secretary or the Governor shall notify the other party in writing of his determination and the Secretary shall provide to the Governor notice of the current and projected status of the tract or tracts containing the common potentially hydrocarbon-bearing area. If the Secretary has leased or intends to lease such tract or tracts, the Secretary and the Governor of the coastal State may enter into an agreement to divide the revenues from production of any common potentially hydrocarbon-bearing area, by unitization or other royalty sharing agreement, pursuant to existing law. If the Secretary and the Governor do not enter into an agreement, the Secretary may nevertheless proceed with the leasing of the tract or tracts. Any revenues received by the United States under such an agreement shall be subject to the requirements of paragraph (2).

"(4) The deposits in the Treasury account described in this section shall be invested by the Secretary of the Treasury in securities backed by the full faith and credit of the United States having maturities suitable to the needs of the account and yielding the highest reasonably available interest rates as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(5)(A) When there is a boundary dispute between the United States and a State under section 7 of this Act, the Secretary shall credit to the account referred to in section 8004 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1985 revenues from oil and gas lease sales in the area within three nautical miles of the boundary asserted by the State, if that money has not otherwise been deposited in the separate account established under section 7. Proceeds of the account established under section 7, and the account referred to in section 8004 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1985 shall be distributed as follows:

"(i) If a State is wholly successful in its claim under section 7, such claim shall be satisfied by the money deposited in the escrow account established by section 7. Any excess monies in the section 7 account attributable to such State shall be transferred to the 8(g) account, and any monies due that State, both retrospectively and prospectively, as a result of the 8(g) zone created by the newly established boundary shall be distributed to the State in accordance with the terms of section 8004 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1985.

"(ii) If the United States is wholly successful in its claim under section 7, the amount of money that is necessary to satisfy the State's share as set forth under section 8004 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1985 shall be distributed from the revenues deposited in the section 7 escrow account. The amounts remaining after the distributions described in this subparagraph shall be paid to the United States pursuant to this section.

"(iii) If the United States or the affected State is partially successful in its claim under section 7, after the distribution under that result, the amount of money that is necessary to satisfy the State as set forth under section 8004 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1985 shall be distributed first from the remaining monies in the section 7 escrow account, and then from the amounts deposited or credited in the account referred to in section 8004 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1985. For amounts credited, the distribution shall be in accordance with clause (iv). The amounts remaining after the distributions described in this subparagraph shall be paid to the United States pursuant to this section.

"(iv) If there is insufficient money from the applicable oil and gas lease sales deposited in either the account established by section 7 or the account referred to in section 8004 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1985, the recoupment provisions of section 8006 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1985 shall be applicable.

"(B) This paragraph applies to all Federal oil and gas lease sales, under this Act, including joint lease sales, occurring after September 18, 1978.

"(6) This section shall be deemed to take effect on October 1, 1985, for purposes of determining the amounts to be deposited in the separate account and the States' shares described in paragraph (2).

"(7) When the Secretary leases any tract which lies wholly or partially within three miles of the seaward boundary of two or more States, the revenues from such tract shall be distributed as otherwise provided by this section, except that the State's share of such revenues that would otherwise result under this section shall be divided equally among such States.".

SEC. 8004. DISTRIBUTION OF 8(g) ACCOUNT.

(a) Prior to January 1, 1986, the Secretary shall distribute to the designated coastal States the sum of:

(1) The amounts due and payable to each such State under paragraph (2) of section 8(g) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, as amended by this title, for the period between October 1, 1985, and the date of such distribution, and

(2) The amounts due each such State under subsection (b) of this section for the period prior to October 1, 1985.

SEC. 9217. LIVER TRANSPLANTS.

(a) The Senate finds that:

(1) There have been more than 600 liver transplants since 1963 and the one year survival rate at qualified institutions is now greater than 70 percent.

(2) There are 4,000 to 4,700 potential candidates in the United States each year who require a liver transplant, but only a small percentage would be eligible for Medicare coverage.

(3) There are currently individuals on waiting lists for liver transplants who will die without Medicare coverage.

(4) After extensive review and consideration of all the available data, an National Institutes of Health expert panel concluded liver transplantation is "a therapeutic modality for end-stage liver disease that deserves broader application" in a limited number of centers where they can be carried out under optimal conditions.

(5) National Institutes of Health further recommended that liver transplants be done in individuals under 18 years of age.

(6) The CHAMPUS program, after considering all relevant data, determined that there was no scientific basis for limiting liver transplants to children under 18 years of age.

(7) The Department of Health and Human Services has determined that liver transplantation is no longer an experimental procedure only for children under 18.

(b) Based upon the above findings, it is the sense of the Senate that:

(1) For the purposes of title XVIII of the Social Security Act, the Secretary immediately reconsider the Medicare liver transplant coverage decision and implement a policy under which a liver transplant shall not be considered to be an experimental procedure for Medicare beneficiaries solely because an individual is over 18 years of age.

(2) A liver transplant shall be covered under such title when reasonable and medically necessary.

(3) The Secretary shall place appropriate limiting criteria on coverage, including those relating to the patient's condition, the disease state, and the institution providing the care, so as to ensure the highest quality of medical care demonstrated to be consistent with successful outcomes.

SEC. 11002. FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF POLICY.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) single-employer defined benefit pension plans have a substantial impact on interstate commerce and are affected with a national interest;

(2) the continued well-being and retirement income security of millions of workers, retirees, and their dependents are directly affected by such plans;

(3) the existence of a sound termination insurance system is fundamental to the retirement income security of participants and beneficiaries of such plans; and

(4) the current termination insurance system in some instances encourages employers to terminate pension plans, evade their obligations to pay benefits, and shift unfunded pension liabilities onto the termination insurance system and the other premium-payers.

(b) ADDITIONAL FINDINGS.—The Congress further finds that modification of the current termination insurance system and an increase in the insurance premium for single-employer defined benefit pension plans—

(1) is desirable to increase the likelihood that full benefits will be paid to participants and beneficiaries of such plans;

(2) is desirable to provide for the transfer of liabilities to the termination insurance system only in cases of severe hardship;

(3) is necessary to maintain the premium costs of such system at a reasonable level; and

(4) is necessary to finance properly current funding deficiencies and future obligations of the single-employer pension plan termination insurance system.

(c) DECLARATION OF POLICY.—It is hereby declared to be the policy of this Act—

(1) to foster and facilitate interstate commerce,

(2) to encourage the maintenance and growth of single-employer defined benefit pension plans,

(3) to increase the likelihood that participants and beneficiaries under single-employer defined benefit pension plans will receive their full benefits,

(4) to provide for the transfer of unfunded pension liabilities onto the single-employer pension plan termination insurance system only in cases of severe hardship,

(5) to maintain the premium costs of such system at a reasonable level; and

(6) to assure the prudent financing of current funding deficiencies and future obligations of the single-employer pension plan termination insurance system by increasing termination insurance premiums.

"(iii) certification by the plan administrator that the information on which the enrolled actuary based the certification under clause (i) and the information provided to the corporation under clause (ii) is accurate and complete.

"(B) NOTICE TO PARTICIPANTS AND BENEFICIARIES OF BENEFIT COMMITMENTS.—At the time a notice is sent by the plan administrator under subparagraph (A), the plan administrator shall send a notice to each person who is a participant or beneficiary under the plan—

"(4) CONTINUING AUTHORITY.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to preclude the continued exercise by the corporation, after the termination date of a plan terminated in a standard termination under this subsection, of its authority under section 4003 with respect to matters relating to the termination. A certification under paragraph (3)(B) shall not affect the corporation's obligations under section 4022.".

(B) EXCEPTION IN CASES OF SUBSTANTIAL BUSINESS HARDSHIP.—The preceding provisions of this subsection shall not apply (except in the case of an acquisition, takeover, or leveraged buyout) if the contributing sponsor demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Corporation that the contributing sponsor is experiencing substantial business hardship. For purposes of this subparagraph, a contributing sponsor shall be considered as experiencing substantial business hardship if the contributing sponsor has been operating, and can demonstrate that it will continue to operate, at an economic loss.

"(V) whether the plan is sufficient for guaranteed benefits as of such date;

"(iii) in any case in which the plan is not sufficient for benefit commitments as of such date—

"(I) the name and address of each participant and beneficiary under the plan as of such date, and

"(II) such case has not, as of the termination date, been dismissed, and

"(III) the bankruptcy court (or other appropriate court in a case under such similar law of a State or political subdivision) approves the termination.

"(iii) TERMINATION REQUIRED TO ENABLE PAYMENT OF DEBTS WHILE STAYING IN BUSINESS OR TO AVOID UNREASONABLY BURDENSOME PENSION COSTS CAUSED BY DECLINING WORKFORCE.—The requirements of this clause are met by a person if such person demonstrates to the satisfaction of the corporation that—

"(I) unless a distress termination occurs, such person will be unable to pay such person's debts when due and will be unable to continue in business, or

"(II) the costs of providing pension coverage have become unreasonably burdensome, solely as a result of a decline of such person's workforce covered as participants under all single-employer plans of which such person is a contributing sponsor.

"(C) SUBSTANTIAL MEMBER.—For purposes of subparagraph (B), the term 'substantial member' of a controlled group means a person whose assets comprise 5 percent or more of the total assets of the controlled group as a whole. For purposes of clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (B), such term includes any member of the controlled group who does not meet the requirements of the preceding sentence but did meet such requirements as of the date of the filing of the petition referred to therein.

"(ii) determine whether the plan is sufficient for benefit commitments (as of the termination date) or that the corporation is unable to make such determination on the basis of information made available to the corporation, and

"(iii) notify the plan administrator of the determinations made pursuant to this subparagraph as soon as practicable.

"(i) CASES OF SUFFICIENCY FOR BENEFIT COMMITMENTS.—In any case in which the corporation determines that the plan is sufficient for benefit commitments, the plan administrator shall proceed to distribute the plan's assets in the manner described in subsection (b)(3), and take such other actions as may be appropriate to carry out the termination of the plan.

"(ii) CASES OF SUFFICIENCY FOR GUARANTEED BENEFITS WITHOUT A FINDING OF SUFFICIENCY FOR BENEFIT COMMITMENTS.—In any case in which the corporation determines that the plan is sufficient for guaranteed benefits, but further determines that the plan is not sufficient for benefit commitments (or that it is unable to determine whether the plan is sufficient for benefit commitments on the basis of the information made available to it)—

"(I) the plan administrator shall proceed to distribute the plan's assets in the manner described in subsection (b)(3), and

"(II) the corporation shall establish a separate trust in connection with the plan for purposes of section 4049.

"(I) the corporation shall commence proceedings in accordance with section 4042, and

"(II) the corporation shall establish a separate trust in connection with the plan for purposes of section 4049 unless the corporation determines that all benefit commitments under the plan are benefits guaranteed by the corporation under section 4022.

"(C) FINDING AFTER AUTHORIZED COMMENCEMENT OF TERMINATION THAT PLAN IS UNABLE TO PAY BENEFITS.—

"(i) FINDING WITH RESPECT TO GUARANTEED BENEFITS ONLY.—If, after the plan administrator has begun to terminate the plan as authorized by subparagraph (B)(i) or (ii), the corporation or the plan administrator finds that the plan is unable, or will be unable, to pay all benefits under the plan which are guaranteed by the corporation under section 4022, the plan administrator shall notify the corporation of such finding as soon as practicable thereafter. If the corporation makes such a finding or concurs with the finding of the plan administrator, it shall institute appropriate proceedings under section 4042.

"(ii) FINDING WITH RESPECT TO BENEFIT COMMITMENTS WHICH ARE NOT GUARANTEED BENEFITS.—If, after the plan administrator has begun to terminate the plan as authorized under subparagraph (B)(i), the corporation or the plan administrator finds that the plan is unable, or will be unable, to pay benefit commitments which are not benefits guaranteed by the corporation under section 4022, the plan administrator shall notify the corporation of such finding as soon as practicable thereafter. If the corporation makes such a finding or concurs with the finding of the plan administrator, it shall take the actions set forth in subparagraph (B)(ii)(II) relating to the trust established for purposes of section 4049.

"(D) ADMINISTRATION OF THE PLAN DURING INTERIM PERIOD.—During the period commencing on the date on which the plan administrator provides a notice of distress termination to the corporation under subsection (a)(2) and ending on the date on which the plan administrator receives notification from the corporation of its determinations under subparagraph (A), the plan administrator—

"(i) shall refrain from distributing assets or taking any other actions to carry out the proposed termination under this subsection,

"(ii) shall pay benefits attributable to employer contributions, other than death benefits, only in the form of an annuity,

"(iv) shall continue to pay all benefit commitments under the plan, except that, commencing on the proposed termination date, the plan administrator shall limit the payment of benefits under the plan to those benefits which are guaranteed by the corporation under section 4022 or to which assets are required to be allocated under section 4044.

In the event the plan is later determined not to have met the requirements for distress termination, any benefits which are not paid solely by reason of clause (iv) shall be due and payable immediately (together with interest).".

Any State which provides for the establishment and carrying out of one or more such programs in accordance with this section for a fiscal year shall be entitled to receive payments under this section for such fiscal year, in an amount determined under subsection (e). Such payments shall be made only for the fiscal years 1987 and 1988.

"(b) The State agency administering or supervising the administration of the State's programs under this part shall be responsible for administering or supervising the administration of the State's programs described in subsection (a). Payment under this section shall be made to the State, and shall be used for the purpose of conducting and providing in accordance with this section (directly or under contracts with local governmental entities or private nonprofit organizations) the activities and services required to carry out the program or programs involved.

"(2) If any State does not apply for funds under this section for any fiscal year within the time provided in subsection (c), the funds to which such State would have been entitled for such fiscal year shall be reallocated to one or more other States on the basis of their relative need for additional payments under this section (as determined by the Secretary).

"(iii) that, in the case of the Student Loan Marketing Association, the lender will make a consolidation loan to any eligible borrower on request of that borrower;

"(B) that each consolidation loan made by the lender will bear interest, and be subject to repayment, in accordance with subsection (c);

"(C) that each consolidation loan will be made, notwithstanding any other provision of this part limiting the maximum principal amount for all insured loans made to a borrower, in an amount (i) which is not less than the minimum amount required for eligibility of the borrower under subsection (a)(3)(A)(i), and (ii) which is equal to the sum of the unpaid principal, accrued unpaid interest and late charges of all loans received by the eligible borrower under this title which are selected by the borrower for consolidation;

"(D) that the proceeds of each consolidation loan will be paid by the lender to the holder or holders of the loans so selected to discharge the liability on such loans;

"(F) such other terms and conditions as the Secretary or guaranty agency (whichever is party to the agreement) may specifically require of the lender to carry out this section.

"(2) The Secretary shall issue a certificate of comprehensive insurance coverage under section 429(b) to a lender which has entered into an agreement with the Secretary under paragraph (1) of this subsection. A guaranty agency may issue a certificate of comprehensive insurance coverage to a lender if the lender has entered into an agreement under paragraph (1) of this subsection. The Secretary shall not issue such a certificate under this paragraph to a lender described in clause (B) or (C) of subsection (a)(1) if the Secretary determines that such lender has reasonable access in its State, for the purpose of obtaining such a certificate, to a guaranty agency. In either case, such certificate shall, at a minimum, provide—

"(A) that all consolidation loans made by such lender in conformity with the requirements of this section will be insured against loss of principal and interest by the issuer of such certificate;

"(B) that a consolidation loan will not be insured unless the lender has determined to its satisfaction, in accordance with reasonable and prudent business practices, for each loan being consolidated (i) that the loan is a legal, valid, and binding obligation of the borrower; (ii) that each such loan was made and serviced in compliance with applicable laws and regulations; and (iii) in the case of loans under this part, that the insurance on such loan is in full force and effect;

"(C) the effective date and expiration date of the certificate;

"(D) the aggregate amount to which the certificate applies;

"(E) that, if the lender prior to the expiration of the certificate no longer proposes to make consolidation loans, the lender will so notify the issuer of such certificate in order that the certificate may be terminated (without affecting the insurance on any consolidation loan made prior to such termination); and

"(F) the terms upon which the issuer of the certificate may limit, suspend, or terminate the lender's authority to make consolidation loans under the certificate (without affecting the insurance on any consolidation loan made prior to such limitation, suspension, or termination).

"(3) A consolidation loan made pursuant to this section shall be insurable under a certificate issued pursuant to paragraph (2) only if the loan is made to an eligible borrower who has agreed to notify the holder of the loan promptly concerning any change of address and the loan is evidenced by a note or other written agreement which—

"(A) is made without security and without endorsement, except that if the borrower is a minor and such note or other written agreement executed by him would not, under applicable law, create a binding obligation, endorsement may be required;

"(B) provides for the payment of interest and the repayment of principal in accordance with subsection (c) of this section and contains notice of the possibility of a revised repayment schedule under paragraph (2) of such subsection;

"(C) provides that periodic installments of principal need not be paid, but interest shall accrue and be paid, during any period—

"(i) during which the borrower is pursuing a full-time course of study at an eligible institution, is pursuing a course of study pursuant to a graduate fellowship program approved by the Secretary, or pursuant to a rehabilitation training program for disabled individuals approved by the Secretary;

"(ii) not in excess of 2 years during which the borrower is serving an internship, the successful completion of which is required in order to receive professional recognition;

"(iii) not in excess of 3 years during which the borrower is temporarily totally disabled, as established by sworn affidavit of a qualified physician, or during which the borrower is unable to secure employment by reason of the care required by a spouse who is so disabled; or

"(iv) which is a single period, not in excess of 12 months, at the request of the borrower, during which the borrower is seeking and unable to find full-time employment; and that any such period shall not be included in determining the repayment period provided pursuant to subsection (c)(2) of this section;

"(D) entitles the borrower to accelerate without penalty repayment of the whole or any part of the loan; and

"(E)(i) contains a notice of the system of disclosure concerning such loan to credit bureau organizations under section 430(b)(2), and (ii) provides that the lender on request of the borrower will provide information on the repayment status of the note to such organizations.

"(c)(1) Consolidation loans made under this section shall bear interest at the rate of 10 per centum per annum on the unpaid principal balance of the loan, except that, if the consolidation loan is used for the purpose of discharging liability on a loan made pursuant to section 428B, the consolidation loan shall bear interest at a rate per annum on such unpaid balance which is equal to the highest applicable interest rate under section 427A on any loan which is selected for consolidation by the borrower. For the purposes of payment of special allowances under section 438(b)(2), the interest rate required by this subsection is the applicable interest rate with respect to a consolidation loan.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of this part, to the extent authorized by its certificate of insurance under subsection (b)(2)(F) and approved by the issuer of such certificate, the lender of a consolidation loan, with the agreement of the borrower, may establish such repayment terms as will promote the objectives of this section, including the establishment of graduated and income sensitive repayment schedules. In each case a consolidation loan shall be repaid as follows:

"(A) in the case of a consolidation loan the original amount of which is less than $7,500, such loan shall be repaid in not more than 10 years;

"(B) in the case of a consolidation loan the original amount of which equals or exceeds $7,500 but is less than $11,000, such loan shall be repaid in not more than 13 years; or

"(C) in the case of a consolidation loan the original amount of which equals or exceeds $11,000, such loan shall be repaid in not more than 15 years.

"(3) Repayment of a consolidation loan shall commence within 60 days after all holders have, pursuant to subsection (b)(1)(D), discharged the liability of the borrower on the loans selected for consolidation.

"(4) No origination fee or insurance premium shall be charged to the borrower on any consolidation loan, and no insurance premium shall be payable by the lender to the issuer of the certificate of insurance with respect to any such loan.

"(d)(1) If, within 18 months after the effective date of this section, an eligible lender described in subsection (a)(1)(B) for a State has not entered into an agreement with the Secretary or a guaranty agency for purposes of making consolidation loans under this section, the Secretary may, after a hearing and upon a determination of need therefor, enter into an agreement for the purposes of making consolidation loans to eligible borrowers in such State with an eligible lender described in clause (B) or (C) of subsection (a)(1) from another State.

"(2) Notice of the hearing required by paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be sent to the Governor of the affected State and the eligible lenders described in subsection (a)(1)(B) for that State. At any such hearing representatives of such Governor and lenders may present evidence and testimony and examine witnesses, and full consideration shall be given to the views of such Governor and lenders with respect to the interests of the eligible borrowers in that State and with respect to the impact on programs of such lenders of allowing a lender described in clause (B) or (C) of subsection (a)(1) from another State to make consolidation loans pursuant to an agreement under this subsection in such State.

"(3) An agreement under this subsection may contain such terms and conditions as the Secretary may specifically require of the lender to carry out this section.

"(4) The requirements of paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection shall not apply if, in any State, an eligible lender described in subsection (a)(1)(B) from another State is functioning as a secondary market described in subparagraph (D) or (F) of section 435(g)(1) prior to the date of enactment of the Student Financial Assistance Amendments of 1985 and such lender agrees to make consolidation loans to eligible borrowers in such State.

"(e) The authority to make loans under this section expires at the close of September 30, 1991. Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the Secretary to promulgate rules or regulations governing the terms or conditions of the agreements and certificates under subsection (b). the Secretary may impose a civil penalty upon such lender or agency of not to exceed $15,000 for each violation, failure, or misrepresentation.

"(2) No civil penalty may be imposed under paragraph (1) of this subsection unless it is determined that—

"(ii) gross negligence; or

"(iii) willful actions on the part of the lender or guaranty agency; and

"(5) If a loan affected by a violation, failure, or substantial misrepresentation is assigned to another holder, the lender or guaranty agency responsible for the violation, failure, or substantial misrepresentation shall remain liable for any civil money penalty provided for under paragraph (1) of this subsection, but the assignee shall not be liable for any such civil money penalty.

"(6) Until a matter is referred to the Attorney General, any civil penalty under paragraph (1) of this subsection may be compromised by the Secretary. In determining the amount of such penalty, or the amount agreed upon in compromise, the Secretary shall consider the appropriateness of the penalty to the resources of the lender or guaranty agency subject to the determination; the gravity of the violation, failure, or substantial misrepresentation; the frequency and persistence of the violation, failure, or substantial misrepresentation; and the amount of any losses resulting from the violation, failure, or substantial misrepresentation. The amount of such penalty, when finally determined, or the amount agreed upon in compromise, may be deducted from any sums owing by the United States to the lender or agency charged (unless the lender or agency has in the case of a final agency determination commenced proceedings for judicial review within 90 days of the determination, in which case the deduction may not be made during the pendency of the proceeding).".

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 629 is amended to read as follows:

"§ 629. Recovery by the United States of the cost of certain care and services

"(a)(1) Subject to the provisions of this section, in any case in which a veteran is furnished care or services under this chapter for a non-service-connected disability described in paragraph (2) of this subsection, the United States has the right to recover or collect the reasonable cost of such care or services (as determined by the Administrator) from a third party to the extent that the veteran (or the provider of the care or services) would be eligible to receive payment for such care or services from such third party if the care or services had not been furnished by a department or agency of the United States.

"(2) Paragraph (1) of this subsection applies to a non-service-connected disability—

"(A) that is incurred incident to the veteran's employment and that is covered under a workers' compensation law or plan that provides for payment for the cost of health care and services provided to the veteran by reason of the disability;

"(B) that is incurred as the result of a motor vehicle accident to which applies a State law that requires the owners or operators of motor vehicles registered in that State to have in force automobile accident reparations insurance;

"(C) that is incurred as the result of a crime of personal violence that occurred in a State, or a political subdivision of a State, in which a person injured as the result of such a crime is entitled to receive health care and services at such State's or subdivision's expense for personal injuries suffered as the result of such crime; or

"(D) that is incurred by a veteran—

"(i) who does not have a service-connected disability; and

"(ii) who is entitled to care (or payment of the expenses of care) under a health-plan contract.

"(3) In the case of a health-plan contract that contains a requirement for payment of a deductible or copayment by the veteran—

"(A) the veteran's not having paid such deductible or copayment with respect to care or services furnished under this chapter shall not preclude recovery or collection under this section; and

"(B) the amount that the United States may collect or recover under this section shall be reduced by the appropriate deductible or copayment amount, or both.

"(b)(1) As to the right provided in subsection (a) of this section, the United States shall be subrogated to any right or claim that the veteran (or the veteran's personal representative, successor, dependents, or survivors) may have against a third party.

"(2)(A) In order to enforce any right or claim to which the United States is subrogated under paragraph (1) of this subsection, the United States may intervene or join in any action or proceeding brought by the veteran (or the veteran's personal representative, successor, dependents, or survivors) against a third party.

"(B) The United States may institute and prosecute legal proceedings against the third party if—

"(i) an action or proceeding described in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph is not begun within 180 days after the first day on which care or services for which recovery is sought are furnished to the veteran by the Administrator under this chapter;

"(ii) the United States has sent written notice by certified mail to the veteran at the veteran's last-known address (or to the veteran's personal representative or successor) of the intention of the United States to institute such legal proceedings; and

"(iii) a period of 60 days has passed following the mailing of such notice.

"(c)(1) The Administrator may compromise, settle, or waive any claim which the United States has under this section.

"(2)(A) The Administrator, after consultation with the Comptroller General of the United States, shall prescribe regulations for the purpose of determining the reasonable cost of care or services under subsection (a)(1) of this section. Any determination of such cost shall be made in accordance with such regulations.

"(B) Such regulations shall provide that the reasonable cost of care or services sought to be recovered or collected from a third-party liable under a health-plan contract may not exceed the amount that such third party demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Administrator it would pay for the care or services in accordance with the prevailing rates at which the third party makes payments under comparable health-plan contracts with facilities (other than facilities of departments or agencies of the United States) in the same geographic area.

"(C) Not later than 45 days after the date on which the Administrator prescribes such regulations (or any amendment to such regulations), the Comptroller General shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives the Comptroller General's comments on and recommendations regarding such regulations (or amendment).

"(d) Any contract or agreement into which the Administrator enters with a person under section 3718 of title 31 for collection services to recover indebtedness owed the United States under this section shall provide, with respect to such services, that such person is subject to sections 3301 and 4132 of this title.

"(e) A veteran eligible for care or services under this chapter—

"(1) may not be denied such care or services by reason of this section; and

"(2) may not be required by reason of this section to make any copayment or deductible payment in order to receive such care.

"(g) Amounts collected or recovered on behalf of the United States under this section shall be deposited into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"(h)(1) Subject to paragraph (3) of this subsection, the Administrator shall make available medical records of a veteran described in paragraph (2) of this subsection for inspection and review by representatives of the third party concerned for the sole purposes of permitting the third party to verify—

"(A) that the care or services for which recovery or collection is sought were furnished to the veteran; and

"(B) that the provision of such care or services to the veteran meets criteria generally applicable under the health-plan contract involved.

"(2) A veteran described in this paragraph is a veteran who is a beneficiary of a health-plan contract under which recovery or collection is sought under this section from the third party concerned for the cost of the care or services furnished to the veteran.

"(3) Records shall be made available under this subsection under such conditions to protect the confidentiality of such records as the Administrator shall prescribe in regulations.

"(i) For purposes of this section—

"(1)(A) The term 'health-plan contract' means an insurance policy or contract, medical or hospital service agreement, membership or subscription contract, or similar arrangement, under which health services for individuals are provided or the expenses of such services are paid.

"(B) Such term does not include—

(i) was entered into before the date of the enactment of this Act; and

(ii) is not modified or renewed on or after such date.

(B) In the case of a health-plan contract (as so defined) that was entered into before

TITLE XX—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. 20001. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

(a) When the Senate is considering a reconciliation bill or a reconciliation resolution pursuant to section 310 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, upon a point of order being made by any Senator against material extraneous to the instructions to a committee which is contained in any title or provision of the bill or resolution or offered as an amendment to the bill or resolution, and the point of order is sustained by the Chair, any part of said title or provision that contains material extraneous to the instructions to said Committee as defined in subsection (d) shall be deemed stricken from the bill and may not be offered as an amendment from the floor. An affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members, duly chosen and sworn, shall be required to sustain an appeal of the ruling of the Chair on a point of order raised under this section, as well as to waive or suspend the provisions of this subsection.

(b) No motion to waive or suspend the requirement of section 305(b)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as it relates to germaneness with respect to a reconciliation bill or resolution, shall be agreed to unless supported by an affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members, duly chosen and sworn, which super-majority shall be required to successfully appeal the ruling of the Chair on a point of order raised under that section, as well as to waive or suspend the provisions of this subsection.

(c) This section shall become effective on the date of enactment of this title and shall remain in effect until January 2, 1987.

(d)(1)(A) Except as provided in paragraph (2), a provision of a reconciliation bill or reconciliation resolution considered pursuant to section 310 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 shall be considered extraneous if such provision does not produce a change in outlays or revenues, including changes in outlays and revenues brought about by changes in the terms and conditions under which outlays are made or revenues are required to be collected; (B) any provision producing an increase in outlays or decrease in revenues shall be considered extraneous if the net effect of provisions reported by the Committee reporting the title containing the provision is that the Committee fails to achieve its reconciliation instructions; (C) a provision that is not in the jurisdiction of the Committee with jurisdiction over said title or provision shall be considered extraneous; (D) a provision shall be considered extraneous if it produces changes in outlays or revenues which are merely incidental to the non-budgetary components of the provision.

(2) A provision shall not be considered extraneous under (1)(A) above if: (A) it is designed to mitigate the direct effects clearly attributable to a provision changing outlays or revenues and both provisions together produce a net reduction in the deficit; (B) it will result in a substantial reduction in outlays or a substantial increase in revenues during fiscal years after the fiscal years covered by the reconciliation bill or reconciliation resolution; (C) a reduction of outlays or an increase in revenues is likely to occur as a result of the provision, in the event of new regulations authorized by the provision or likely to be proposed, court rulings on pending litigation, or relationships between economic indices and stipulated statutory triggers pertaining to the provision, other than the regulations, court rulings or relationships currently projected by the Congressional Budget Office for scorekeeping purposes; (D) such provision will be likely to produce a significant reduction in outlays or increase in revenues but, due to insufficient data, such reduction or increase cannot be reliably estimated.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill (H.R. 3128) to make changes in spending and revenue provisions for purposes of deficit reduction and program improvement, consistent with the budget process, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment to the text of the bill struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House amendment struck out all of the Senate amendment after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House with an amendment which is a substitute for the House amendment and the Senate amendment. The differences between the Senate amendment, the House amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

TITLE I—AGRICULTURE PROGRAMS

The Senate amendment included agriculture provisions relating to agricultural exports, food stamps and commodity distribution, and agricultural credit.

The House bill contained no similar provisions.

The Conference substitute deletes the Senate provisions and substitutes language providing that the expenditures and outlays of Titles XI and XIII of the Food Security Act of 1985 shall be counted for purposes of determining savings in this reconciliation legislation. The provisions contained in the Senate reconciliation language have been considered by the Congress within the context of the conference on H.R. 2100, the Food Security Act of 1985.

TOBACCO SUPPORT PROGRAM

(1) Findings and purposes

(a) The Senate amendment sets forth certain findings concerning the importance of maintaining a viable tobacco price support and production adjustment program and the reasons necessitating a reform in the current program. (Sec. 792.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision.

(b) The Senate amendment states that the purposes of the bill are—

(1) to encourage cooperation among tobacco producers and purchasers and the Secretary of Agriculture in reducing tobacco price support levels, assessment costs, and the size of producer associations' inventories;

(2) to adjust the method by which price support levels and production quotas are calculated to reflect market conditions;

(3) to facilitate the purchase and sale of Flue-cured and Burley tobacco presently in the inventories of the producer associations;

(4) to provide that purchasers and producers of domestic tobacco will share equally in the cost of maintaining the tobacco price support program; and

(5) to expedite reform of the system of grading tobacco. (Sec. 792.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision.

(2) Price support adjustments

(a) The Senate amendment establishes the price support level for the 1985 crop of Burley tobacco at $1.449 per pound. (Sec. 792A.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute establishes the price support level for the 1985 crop of Burley tobacco at $1.488 per pound, in accordance with the provisions of Public Law 99-157, and establishes the price support level for the 1986 crop of Flue-cured tobacco at $1.438 per pound and the price support level for the 1986 crop of Burley tobacco at $1.488 per pound. The House conferees expressed concern that the level of price supports in the Senate amendment was inadequate.

(b) The Senate amendment establishes the price support level for the 1985 and subsequent crops of any kind of tobacco (other than Flue-cured and Burley tobacco) for which marketing quotas are in effect or are not disapproved by producers at the level in cents per pound at which the immediately preceding crop was supported, plus or minus, respectively, the amount by which (1) the support level for the crop for which the determination is being made, as determined under section 106(b) of the Agricultural Act of 1949, is greater or less than (2) the support level for the immediately preceding crop, as determined under such section, as that difference may be adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture under section 106(d) of such Act if the support level under clause (1) is greater than the support level under clause (2).

The Senate amendment also provides that, if requested by the board of directors of the association through which price support for the respective kind of tobacco specified above is made available to producers, the Secretary may reduce the support level for such kind of tobacco to the extent requested by the association to more accurately reflect the market value and improve the marketability of such tobacco. (Sec. 792A.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision but makes it applicable to the 1986 and subsequent crops since the 1985 price support level for these kinds of tobacco has already been announced.

(c) The Senate amendment establishes the price support level for the 1986 and subsequent crops of Flue-cured and Burley tobacco for which marketing quotas are in effect or are not disapproved by producers. Under this provision, the support level would be the level in cents per pound at which the immediately preceding crop was supported, plus or minus, respectively, an adjustment of not less than 65 percent nor more than 100 percent of the total, as determined by the Secretary after taking into consideration the supply of the kind of tobacco involved in relation to demand, of—

(1) 66.7 percent of the amount by which the average price received by farmers for Flue-cured and Burley tobacco, respectively, on the United States auction markets, as determined by the Secretary during the 5 marketing years immediately preceding the marketing year for which the determination is being made (excluding the high and low years) is greater or less than the average market price received by farmers for such tobacco on the United States auction markets during the 5 marketing years immediately preceding the marketing year prior to the marketing year for which the determination is being made (excluding the high and low years); and

(2) 33.3 percent of the change, expressed as a cost per pound of tobacco, in the index of prices paid by tobacco growers during the calendar year immediately preceding the year in which the determination is made.

For the purposes of this provision, the average market price for Burley tobacco for the 1984 and each prior applicable marketing year would be reduced by $0.30 per pound, and the average market price for Flue-cured tobacco for the 1985 and each prior applicable marketing year would be reduced by $0.30 per pound. Also, the support level for the 1985 crop of Flue-cured tobacco would be deemed to be $1.399 per pound.

The Senate amendment specifies that the index of prices paid by tobacco farmers is to include items representing general, variable costs of producing tobacco, as determined by the Secretary. However, such index is not to include the cost of land, risk, overhead, management, purchase or leasing of quota, marketing contributions or assessments, and other costs not directly related to the production of tobacco. (Sec. 792A.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute provides that the formula for making future adjustments in the price support levels for Flue-cured and Burley tobacco, as contained in the Senate provision, is applicable to the 1987 and subsequent crops of such tobacco. The Conference substitute establishes, for purposes of calculating future adjustments in the price support levels for Flue-cured and Burley tobacco, that the average market price for Burley tobacco for the 1985 marketing year is to be reduced by $0.039 per pound and the average market price for Flue-cured tobacco for the 1985 marketing year is to be reduced by $0.25 per pound. The Conference substitute deletes the provision that deems the price support level for the 1985 crop of Flue-cured tobacco to be $1.399 per pound.

(d) The Senate amendment, effective for the 1986 and subsequent crops of tobacco, strikes out section 106(g) of the Agricultural Act of 1949, which gives the Secretary authority to lower the price support on certain low quality grades of Flue-cured tobacco if requested by the board of directors of the producer association that makes price support available to producers of Flue-cured tobacco. (Sec. 792A)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision.

(3) Determination of marketing quotas for Flue-cured and Burley tobacco

(a) The Senate amendment defines the term "reserve stock level" to be the greater of 100 million pounds (farm sales weight), in the case of Flue-cured tobacco, and 50 million pounds, in the case of Burley tobacco, or 15 percent of the national marketing quota for Flue-cured or Burley tobacco, respectively, for the marketing year immediately preceding the marketing year for which the level is being determined. (Sec. 792B.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision.

(b) The Senate amendment defines the term "domestic manufactuer of cigarettes" to mean a person that produces and sells more than 1 percent of the cigarettes produced and sold in the United States. (Sec. 792B.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision.

(c) The Senate amendment provides that for the 1986 and each subsequent crop of Flue-cured tobacco, the national marketing quota for a marketing year would be the amount of Flue-cured tobacco, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, that is not more than 103 percent nor less than 97 percent of the total of—

(1) the aggregate of the amounts of Flue-cured tobacco that domestic manufacturers of cigarettes estimate they intend to purchase on the United States auction markets or from producers during the marketing year;

(2) the average annual exports of Flue-cured tobacco during the 3 preceding marketing years; and

(3) the amount, if any, of Flue-cured tobacco that the Secretary, in his discretion, determines is necessary to increase or decrease the inventory of the producer-owned cooperative marketing association that makes price support available to producers of Flue-cured tobacco to establish or maintain such inventory at the reserve stock level for Flue-cured tobacco.

In determining the amount of Flue-cured tobacco necessary to establish the inventory of the producer association at the reserve stock level under clause (3) above, the Secretary must provide for attaining the reserve stock level over a period of 5 years. (Sec. 792B.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision with an amendment that (1) deletes the requirement that the reserve stock level be attained over a period of 5 years; and (2) establishes that for each of the 1982 through 1989 marketing years for Flue-cured tobacco, the national marketing quota for each such marketing year will not be less than 94 percent of the national marketing quota for the preceding marketing year; and for each of the 1990 through 1993 marketing years for Flue-cured tobacco, the national marketing quota for each such marketing year will not be less than 90 percent of the national marketing quota for the preceding marketing year. The House conferees expressed concern that the national marketing quota under the Senate amendment would have resulted in large reductions annually, reflecting the impact of the "buy-out."

It is the intention of the conferees to create a quota setting formula that will establish, as nearly as possible, a quota for the marketing year equal to actual demand of purchasers from that year's crop, plus or minus the amount necessary to maintain the prescribed reserve stock level, as well as the average exports for the 3 preceding years. The conferees encourage the Secretary of Agriculture to study carefully the recordkeeping requirements necessary to determine accurate future marketing quotas for Flue-cured and Burley tobacco.

(d) The Senate amendment deletes the limitation of 10 percent on any downward adjustment in the national marketing quota for Burley tobacco. (Sec. 792B.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision.

(e) The Senate amendment provides that for the 1986 and each subsequent crop of Burley tobacco, the national marketing quota for any marketing year would be the amount of Burley tobacco, as determined by the Secretary, that is not more than 103 percent nor less than 97 percent of the total of—

(1) the aggregate of the amounts of Burley tobacco that domestic manufacturers of cigarettes estimate they intend to purchase on the United States auction markets or from producers during the marketing year;

(2) the average annual exports of Burley tobacco during the 3 preceding marketing years; and

(3) the amount, if any, of Burley tobacco that the Secretary, in his discretion, determines is necessary to increase or decrease the inventories of the producer-owned cooperative marketing associations that make price support available to producers of Burley tobacco to establish or maintain such inventories, in the aggregate, at the reserve stock level for Burley tobacco.

In determining the amount of Burley tobacco necessary to establish or maintain the inventories of the producer associations at the reserve stock level under clause (3) above, the Secretary must provide for attaining the reserve stock level over a period of 5 years. Also, any downward adjustment in the inventories of Burley tobacco of the producer associations under clause (3) above could not exceed the greater of 35 million pounds or 50 percent of the amount by which the total inventories of Burley tobacco of the producer associations exceed the reserve stock level for Burley tobacco. (Sec. 792B.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision with an amendment that (1) clarifies that the 5-year period for attaining the reserve stock level applies only to the initial attainment of the reserve stock level; and (2) establishes that for each of the 1986 through 1989 marketing years for Burley tobacco, the national marketing quota for each such marketing year will not be less than 94 percent of the national marketing quota for the preceding marketing year; and for each of the 1990 through 1993 marketing years for Burley tobacco, the national marketing quota for each such marketing year will not be less than 90 percent of the national marketing quota for the preceding marketing year.

The conferees' concern with respect to the determination of future national marketing quotas (as noted in connection with item (c) above) applies to both Burley and Flue-cured tobacco.

(f) The Senate amendment makes inapplicable to Burley tobacco the limitation of 90 percent on the minimum national factor that is used in determining the farm marketing quota for each year under a poundage quota system. (Sec. 792B.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision.

(g) The Senate amendment requires, no later than December 1 of any marketing year with respect to Flue-cured tobacco (December 1, 1985, with respect to the 1986 crop) and January 15 of any marketing year with respect to Burley tobacco (January 15, 1986, with respect to the 1986 crop), each domestic manufacturer of cigarettes to submit to the Secretary a statement, by kind, of the amount of Flue-cured and Burley tobacco (for which a national marketing quota is in effect or for which the Secretary has proclaimed a national marketing quota for the next succeeding marketing year) that the manufacturer intends to purchase, directly or indirectly, on the United States auction markets or from producers during the next succeeding marketing year. On receipt, the Secretary would aggregate the amounts of intended purchases in a manner that would not allow the identification of any manufacturer's amount of intended purchases.

The Senate amendment also provides that if any domestic manufacturer of cigarettes fails to submit to the Secretary the required statement of its amount of intended purchases, the Secretary would establish the amount of the intended purchases to be attributed to such manufacturer based on (1) the amount of intended purchases submitted by the manufacturer for the preceding marketing year, or (2) if the manufacturer did not submit a statement of its amount of intended purchases for the preceding marketing year, the most recent information available to the Secretary.

The Senate amendment requires that all information with respect to the amount of intended purchases submitted by domestic manufacturers of cigarettes must be kept confidential by officers and employees of the Department of Agriculture. Such information may only be disclosed by such persons in a suit or administrative hearing brought at the direction, or on the request, of the Secretary, or to which the Secretary or any officer of the United States is a party, and involving enforcement of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, except that the name of any person violating any provision of the Act, together with a statement of the particular provisions of such Act that were violated, could be published. Criminal penalties of a $1,000 fine or 1-year imprisonment, or both, and removal from office, are provided for violation of this provision by Department of Agriculture employees.

The Senate amendment exempts statements of the amount of intended purchases that are submitted under this provision from disclosure under the provisions of section 552 of title 5, United States Code (Freedom of Information Act). (Sec. 792B.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision with an amendment that establishes the deadline for submission of the domestic cigarette manufacturer's statement of intended purchases from the 1986 crops of Flue-cured and Burley tobacco as 14 days from the date of enactment of this Act, on January 15, 1986, whichever is later, in the case of Burley tobacco.

(4) Marketing quota announcement date

The Senate amendment changes the date by which the Secretary of Agriculture must proclaim or announce the national marketing quota for any kind of tobacco other than Flue-cured and Burley tobacco from February 1 to March 1 prior to the marketing year in question. (Sec. 792C.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision with an amendment that establishes the deadline for the proclamation and announcement of the 1986 national marketing quotas for Flue-cured and Burley tobacco as 21 days from the date of enactment of this Act, or, in the case of Burley tobacco, February 1, 1986, whichever is later.

(5) Reduction in excess tobacco not subject to marketing penalty

(a) The Senate amendment, effective for the 1986 and subsequent crops of tobacco, reduces the amount of Flue-cured and Burley tobacco that may be marketed without penalty when acreage-poundage or poundage farm marketing quotas are in effect from 110 to 103 percent of the farm marketing quota for the farm. (Sec. 792D.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision.

(b) The Senate amendment reduces from 110 to 103 percent of the farm marketing quota the amount of tobacco marketed from a farm on which price support would be made available when acreage-poundage or poundage marketing quotas are in effect. (Sec 792D.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision.

(6) Purchase requirements; penalty

The Senate amendment requires each domestic manufacturer of cigarettes, at the conclusion of each marketing year, on or before a date prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, to submit to the Secretary a statement, by kind, of the amount of Flue-cured and Burley quota tobacco purchased, directly or indirectly, by such manufacturer during such marketing year. The statement must include the amount of each such kind of tobacco purchased by the manufacturer on the United States auction markets, from producers, and from the inventories of tobacco from the 1985 and subsequent crops of the producer associations that make price support available to producers of Flue-cured or Burley tobacco.

The Senate amendment subjects to a penalty any domestic manufacturer of cigarettes that the Secretary determines, after notice and opportunity for a hearing, has failed to purchase during a marketing year on the United States auction markets, from producers, or from the inventories from the 1985 and subsequent crops of the producer associations a quantity of Flue-cured and Burley quota tobacco equal to at least 90 percent of the amount of the intended purchases of such tobacco, respectively, submitted by the manufacturer or established by the Secretary for such manufacturer for that marketing year for purposes of determining the national marketing quota for such tobacco.

If the total amount of Flue-cured or Burley quota tobacco, respectively, marketed by producers at auction in the United States during the marketing year in question is less than the national marketing quota (including any adjustments for overmarketings or undermarketings) for that kind of tobacco for that marketing year, the amount of intended purchases of each domestic manufacturer of cigarettes for purposes of determining the penalty would be reduced by the percentage by which the total amount marketed at auction in the United States during the marketing year is less than the national marketing quota (including any adjustments for overmarketings and undermarketings) for that kind of tobacco for the marketing year. For purposes of this section, the term "marketed" would include disposition of tobacco by cosigning the tobacco to a producer association for a price support advance.

The Senate amendment provides that the amount of any penalty to be imposed on a manufacturer under this provision would be equal to (1) twice the per pound assessment (as determined under section 106A or 106B of the Agricultural Act of 1949) for the kind of tobacco involved, multiplied by (2) the amount by which the purchases by such manufacturer on the United States auction markets, from producers, or from the inventories from the 1985 and subsequent crops of the producer associations of Flue-cured and Burley quota tobacco, respectively, for the marketing year are less than 90 percent of the amount of intended purchases of such kinds of tobacco submitted by the manufacturer or established by the Secretary for such manufacturer for that marketing year.

The Senate amendment requires that an amount equivalent to the penalty collected by the Secretary under this provision be transmitted by the Secretary to the appropriate producer association that makes price support available to producers of Flue-cured or Burley tobacco, as the case may be, for deposit in such association's No Net Cost Fund or Account.

The Senate amendment provides that the provisions relating to confidentiality of information submitted by domestic manufacturers of cigarettes with respect to intended purchases of tobacco and exemption of such information from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act apply to information submitted by such manufacturers with respect to the amount of purchases of Flue-cured and Burley quota tobacco during a marketing year.

The Senate amendment defines the term "quota tobacco" as used in this provision to mean any kind of tobacco for which marketing quotas are in effect or for which marketing quotas are not disapproved by producers. (Sec. 792E.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision and adds a new provision that permits, with respect to the 1985 and subsequent crops of Burley tobacco, the approval of agreements involving the lease and transfer of Burley tobacco quotas filed after July 1 if the county ASC committee determines, with the concurrence of the State ASC Committee, that (1) all interested parties agreed to such lease and transfer agreement before July 1 and (2) the failure to file a record of the lease and transfer was not a result of gross negligence on the part of any party to such agreement.

(7) Assessment to no net cost funds or accounts

(a) The Senate amendment amends section 106A of the Agricultural Act of 1949 to provide that the Secretary of Agriculture shall require that each purchaser of Flue-cured and Burley quota tobacco pay an assessment to the producer association that makes price support available to producers of that respective kind of tobacco for deposit in the association's No Net Cost Tobacco Fund. The term "purchaser" is defined to mean any person who purchases in the United States, either directly or indirectly for the person's own account or for the account of another, Flue-cured or Burley quota tobacco. The assessment would be in an amount determined from time to time by the association with the approval of the Secretary and would be paid with respect to all purchases of Flue-cured and Burley tobacco that is marketed by producers from a farm, including purchases of such tobacco from the 1986 and subsequent crops from the producer association.

The amount of the producer contributions and purchaser assessments to be paid under section 106A of the Act of 1949 is to be determined by the Secretary in such a manner that producers and purchasers share equally, to the maximum extent practicable, in maintaining an association's Fund. In making such determination with respect to purchaser assessments, however, only 1985 and subsequent crops of Flue-cured and Burley quota tobacco would be taken into account.

The Secretary is to approve the amount of purchaser assessments determined by an association only if the Secretary determine that such amount (in addition to the amount of the producer contributions to the Fund) will result in accumulation of a Fund adequate to reimburse the Commodity Credit Corporation for any net losses the Corporation may sustain under its loan agreements with the association.

The Secretary must also require that any producer contribution or purchaser assessment to be paid under section 106A of the 1949 Act is to be collected—

(1) from the person who acquired the tobacco involved from the producer, but an amount equal to the producer contribution may be deducted by the purchaser from the price paid to such producer in case the tobacco is marketed by sale;

(2) if the tobacco involved is marketed by a producer through a warehouseman or agent, from such warehouseman or agent who may deduct an amount equal to the producer contribution from the price paid to the producer and who may add an amount equal to the purchaser asssessment to the price paid by the purchaser; and

(3) if the tobacco involved is marketed by a producer directly to any person outside the United States, from the producer who may add an amount equal to the purchaser assessment to the price paid by the purchaser.

The Senate amendment also provides that, effective for the 1986 and subsequent crops, the loan agreements between the Commodity Credit Corporation and an association must provide that if the Secretary determines that the amount in the Fund or any net gains on tobacco pledged by the association as security for price support loans exceeds the amounts necessary for the purposes specified in section 106A of the 1949 Act, the association, with the approval of the Secretary, may suspend the payment and collection of contributions and assessments under section 106A of the 1949 Act on terms and conditions established by the association, with the approval of the Secretary. (Sec. 792F.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision. The House conferees expressed concern that the Senate provision does not address producers' uncertainty with respect to future assessments, and fails to apply an equal assessment on imported tobacco.

(b) The Senate amendment amends section 106B of the Agricultural Act of 1949 to require that, if a No Net Cost Tobacco Account is established for an association under section 106B, the Secretary must require that each purchaser of Flue-cured and Burley quota tobacco must pay an assessment to the Commodity Credit Corporation for deposit in the association's Account. The term "purchaser" is defined to mean any person who purchases in the United States, either directly or indirectly for the person's own account or for the account of another, Flue-cured or Burley quota tobacco in the United States. The assessment would be determined by the Secretary in consultation with the association and would be paid with respect to all purchases of Flue-cured and Burley tobacco that is marketed by producers from a farm, including purchases of such tobacco from the 1986 and subsequent crop from the association.

The amount of the assessment to be paid by producers and purchasers of tobacco is to be determined in such a manner that producers and purchasers share equally, to the maximum extent practicable, in maintaining the association's Account. In making such determination with respect to purchasers assessments, however, only 1985 and subsequent crops of Flue-cured and Burley quota tobacco would be taken into account. Also, the amount of any assessment that is determined by the Secretary for the 1986 and subsequent crops of Burley quota tobacco is to be determined without regard to any net losses that the Commodity Credit Corporation may sustain under its loan agreements with associations with respect to the 1983 crop of such tobacco.

Under the Senate amendment any assessment to be paid by a producer or a purchaser under section 106B would be collected from the person who acquired the tobacco involved from such producer, but an amount equal to the producer assessment could be deducted by the purchaser from the price paid to the producer in case such tobacco is marketed by sale. However, if tobacco of the kind for which an Account is established is marketed by a producer through a warehouseman or other agent, both the producer and the purchaser assessment would be collected from such warehouseman or agent who could deduct an amount equal to the producer assessment from the price paid to the producer and who could add an amount equal to the purchaser assessment to the price paid by the purchaser. Also, if tobacco is marketed by a producer directly to any person outside the United States, both the producer and the purchaser assessment would be collected from the producer who could add an amount equal to the purchaser assessment to the price paid by the purchaser. (Sec. 792F.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision.

The conferees encourage the Secretary of Agriculture to use funds from the no-net-cost assessments collected from producers on the 1985 Burley tobacco crop as (provided for in P.L. 99-157) to offset the producers' liability for potential losses associated with the 1982 and 1984 crops of Burley tobacco. In the event that there are no potential losses on the 1982 and 1984 Burley tobacco crops for which producers are responsible, the boards of directors of the Burley tobacco producer associations may determine, with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, how such funds may be used.

(c) The Senate amendment provides that each person who fails to collect any contribution or assessment as required by section 106A or 106B of the 1949 Act and remit such contribution or assessment to the producer association or the Commodity Credit Corporation, as the case may be, at such time and in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary, is liable, in addition to any amount due, to a marketing penalty at a rate equal to 75 percent of the average market price (calculated to the nearest whole cent) for the kind of tobacco involved for the immediately preceding year on the quantity of tobacco as to which the failure occurs. The Secretary may reduce any such marketing penalty in such amount as the Secretary determines equitable in any case in which the failure was unintentional or without knowledge on the part of the person concerned. Any penalty may be assessed by the Secretary only after notice and opportunity for a hearing.

Any person against whom such a penalty is assessed may obtain review of such penalty in an appropriate district court of the United States by filing a civil action in such court not later than 30 days after the penalty is imposed.

An amount equivalent to any such penalty collected by the Secretary must be transmitted by the Secretary to the appropriate association or to the Commodity Credit Corporation, as the case may be, for deposit in the appropriate association's Fund or Account. (Sec. 792F.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision.

(8) Exemption from rulemaking

The Senate amendment requires the Secretary of Agriculture to implement the provisions of the Senate amendment without regard to the provisions requiring notice and other procedures for public participation in rulemaking contained in section 553 of title 5, United States Code, or in any directive of the Secretary. (Sec. 792F(c).)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision.

(9) Purchase of inventory stock

The Senate amendment requires the producer association that makes price support available to producers of Flue-cured tobacco to offer to sell its stocks of Flue-cured tobacco from the 1976 through 1984 crops at the base prices, including carrying charges, in effect as of the date of the offer, reduced by 90 percent for Flue-cured tobacco from the 1976 through 1981 crops and reduced by 10 percent for Flue-cured tobacco from the 1982 through 1984 crops. The purchasers of the 1976 through 1984 crops of Flue-cured tobacco are to pay the full carrying charges that have accrued to such tobacco from the date of the offer made under this provision to the date that such tobacco is removed from the inventory of the association.

The Senate amendment requires each producer association that makes price support available to producers of Burley tobacco to offer to sell its stocks of Burley tobacco from the 1982 crop at the listed base price in effect as of July 1, 1985, and to offer to sell its stocks of Burley tobacco from the 1984 crop at the assocications' costs for such tobacco as of the date of enactment of the bill. Also, purchasers of the 1982 crop of Burley tobacco are to pay the full carrying charges that have accrued to such tobacco, and purchasers of the 1984 crop of Burley tobacco are to pay the full carrying charges that have accrued to such tobacco from the date of enactment of the bill to the date such tobacco is removed from the inventories of the associations.

The Senate amendment requires no later than 30 days after the date of enactment of the bill, that the Commodity Credit Corporation acquire title to the Burley tobacco from the 1983 crop that is pledged as security for loans on such tobacco by calling the loans on such tobacco. The Corporation is then to offer such tobacco for sale at such times, in such quantities, and subject to such conditions as the Corporation deems appropriate. If this tobacco is not sold within 2 years from the date the Corporation calls the loans, the Corporation may offer to sell to domestic manufacturers of cigarettes the remaining stocks of such tobacco at the associations' costs, including carrying charges, as of the date on which the Corporation calls the loans on such tobacco, reduced by 90 percent. Neither tobacco producers nor tobacco purchasers would be responsible for carrying charges that accrue to the 1983 crop of Burley tobacco after the date on which the Commodity Credit Corporation calls the loans on such tobacco.

The Senate amendment authorize domestic manufacturers of cigarettes to enter into agreements to purchase inventory stocks of Flue-cured and Burley tobacco, as set forth in the bill. To be eligible for the reductions in price, the manufacturers would have to enter into such agreements as soon as practicable, but no later than 90 days, after the date of enactment of the bill. Such agreements must provide that, over a period of time, each participating domestic manufacturer of cigarettes must purchases a percentage of the stocks of Flue-cured and Burley tobacco held by the producer associations at the close of the 1984 marketing year, or with respect to the 1983 crop of Burley tobacco, by the Commodity Credit Corporation at the time the Corporation offers such tobacco for sale to domestic manufacturers of cigarettes under the bill. The period of time over which the purchases would be made could not exceed 8 years from the date of enactment of the bill with respect to Flue-cured tobacco, 5 years from the date of enactment of the bill with respect to Burley tobacco from the 1982 and 1984 crops, and 5 years from the date the Commodity Credit Corporation offers the 1983 crop of Burley tobacco for sale to domestic manufacturers of cigarettes with respect to the 1983 crop of Burley tobacco.

The percentage to be purchased by each participating manufacturer is to be at least equal to such manufacturer's respective percentage of the total quantity of net cigarettes manufactured for use as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture on the basis of the monthly reports ("Manufacturer of Tobacco Products—Monthly Reports") submitted (on ATF Form 3068) by manufacturers of tobacco products to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms of the Department of the Treasury.

The amount of tobacco to be purchased by each participating manufacturer is to be determined annually and would be based on the manufacturer's percentage of net cigarettes manufactured for use multiplied by the appropriate annual amount to be withdrawn from the inventories of the producer associations or the Commodity Credit Corporation. The appropriation annual amount to be withdrawn from inventories would be—

(1) 12½ percent of the inventories of Fluecured tobacco from the 1976 through 1984 crops on hand on the date of enactment of the bill;

(2) 20 percent of the inventories of Burley tobacco from the 1982 and 1984 crops on hand on the date of enactment of the bill; and

(3) 20 percent of the inventories of Burley tobacco from the 1983 crop held by the Commodity Credit Corporation on the date 2 years after the call of the loans on such tobacco by the Corporation.

Any purchases by a manufacturer from the inventories of the associations or from the Commodity Credit Corporation for a crop covered by this provision in any year of the buy-out period that exceed the amount of the manufacturer's purchases required under the agreement would be applied against future purchases required of such manufacturer.

The Senate amendment provides that in carrying out this provision, manufacturers may confer with one another and, separately or collectively, with associations, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Commodity Credit Corporation as may be necessary or appropriate to effectuate the provision. Each agreement entered into under this provision must be submitted to the Secretary for review and approval. Agreements with producer associations would be submitted by the association. No agreement could become effective until approved by the Secretary, and the Secretary may not approve any such agreement unless the Secretary has determined that—

(1) the agreement will not unduly impair or disrupt the orderly marketing of current and future tobacco crops during the term of the agreement and is otherwise consistent with the purposes of the bill; and

(2) the price and other terms of sale are uniform and nondiscriminatory among various purchasers.

The Senate amendment also provides that provisions relating to confidentiality of information submitted by cigarette manufacturers with respect to intended purchases of tobacco and exemption of such information from the Freedom of Information Act would apply to information submitted by domestic manufacturers of cigarettes with respect to net cigarettes manufactured for use, including information provided on ATF Form 3068. (Sec. 792G.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision.

(10) Review of tobacco grading system and disaster crop designation

The Senate amendment requires the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct a study of the methods and procedures for grading tobacco marketed in the United States, including an evaluation of—

(1) the extent to which grades assigned to tobacco accurately reflect the quality of such tobacco;

(2) the extent to which the number of grades of tobacco affects the operation of the grading system; and

(3) the competence and independence of tobacco graders.

The Secretary is also required to study the feasibility and desirability of providing for a grade that would be used to designate tobacco that is of such poor quality as a result of a natural disaster as to affect substantially its marketability. As part of this study the Secretary would be required to look at the feasibility and desirability of establishing a price support level, if any, for such tobacco which may be adjusted by the Secretary as necessary to facilitate the sale of such tobacco and protect the no net cost funds or accounts.

Within 120 days after the enactment of the bill, the Secretary is to report the results of these studies, together with any recommendations for necessary legislation, to the House and Senate agriculture committees. As soon as practicable after submission of this report, but no later than the opening of the marketing season for the 1986 crop of Flue-cured tobacco, the Secretary is to implement any recommendations made in such report that may be implemented by the Secretary under existing authority. (Sec. 792H.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision.

(11) Investment of tobacco inspection fees

The Senate amendment authorizes the investment of the fees and charges collected for providing inspection services under the Tobacco Inspection Act. Such fees and charges could be invested by the Secretary of Agriculture in insured or fully collateralized, interest-bearing accounts or, at the discretion of the Secretary, by the Secretary of the Treasury in United States Government debt instruments. Any income realized from this activity would be used to pay the expenses of the Secretary of Agriculture incident to providing services under the Tobacco Inspection Act or reinvested in the manner authorized in the bill. (Sec. 792I.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision.

(12) Effective date

The Senate amendment provides that, except as otherwise provided in the subpart, the subpart and the amendments made by the subpart are to become effective on the date of enactment of the subpart. (Sec. 792J.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision.

TITLE II—ARMED SERVICES AND DEFENSE-RELATED PROGRAMS

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1101) that would authorize the United States to collect from a third-party payer the reasonable cost of care provided in medical facilities of the uniformed services. "Third-party payer" includes both insurance underwriters and private employers who offer self-insured or partially self-insured/partially underwritten health insurance plans. Such collection would be authorized only in the case of a non-active duty beneficiary.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 203) similar to section 1101 of the House bill, except the collection authority would be limited to fiscal years 1986 and 1987.

The Senate amendment also contained two provisions dealing with military retirement. Section 201 would place a ceiling on the total of basic pay and retired pay accrual charge that would require a $2.9 billion reduction in the accrual charge for the military retirement system. Section 202 would require the Secretary of Defense to submit a report (including draft legislation) proposing two separate plans to change the military retirement system: one of the proposed plans would consist only of changes in the military retirement system other than changes in the procedure for periodic cost-of-living adjustments in retired pay. Each proposal would have to be sufficient to reduce the accrual charge by $2.9 billion.

The Senate amendment also contained two provisions (sec. 204 and 205) dealing with the linkage of the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS) to Medicare. These provisions are discussed under Title ——.

The House recedes with amendments.

The conferees agree to drop sections 201 and 202 of the Senate amendment because identical provisions were enacted as sections 666 and 667 of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1986 (Public Law 99-145).

The conferees agree to retain the provision to bill third-party payers for the cost of medical care provided to non-active duty beneficiaries in military medical facilities. This provision would become permanent law, but would be applicable only to inpatient medical care. Once the inpatient collection process is operational, the conferees intend to review the program to determine the feasibility and cost-effectiveness of extending this coordination of benefits requirement to outpatient services as well. Authority to collect would become effective on October 1, 1986, and would apply to any insurance, medical service, or health plan agreement entered into, amended or renewed on or after the date of enactment of this act.

The reasonable cost of inpatient medical care to be collected would be determined in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense. In such regulations, the Secretary of Defense may utilize the per diem charge currently used for collections under the Federal Medical Care Recovery Act (42 U.S.C. 2651 et seq.), diagnosis related groups, fee schedules, or such other methodology determined appropriate by the Secretary. Regardless of the methodology, however, the reasonable cost collected from a third-party payer should not exceed an amount equal to the prevailing rate that the third-party payer can demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Defense it would pay under valid contractual arrangements with other facilities or providers within the same geographic area for similar service or services. The conferees want to ensure that Department of Defense collection practices are consistent with and do not impede cost containment initiatives undertaken by the private sector.

For the first year, funds collected would be returned to the Treasury. When the Department of Defense and the military services successfully implement a program of collections and develop an accounting system that is capable of tracking the level of funds collected and identifying the disposition of those funds within the military medical care system, the conferees contemplate that the Congress will be prepared to review the Department of Defense's request to permit the funds to be returned to the appropriation account from which the care was provided, rather than to the Treasury. The conferees further contemplate that the progress made on such an accounting system will be reviewed next year.

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, December 13, 1985.

Hon. LES ASPIN,
Chairman, Committee on Armed Services, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the attached cost estimate for the reconciliation provisions of subconferences four and five as of December 13, 1985.

The provision in subconference four authorizes the federal government to recover from third-party health insurers the cost of inpatient medical care provided to dependents of active-duty military members, military retirees, and retirees' dependents when these patients are covered by private health insurance, effective October 1, 1986.

The provision in subconference five requires institutions wishing to participate in Medicare to accept Civilian Health and Medical Care Program for the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS) patients at the same reimbursement rates applied to Medicare users, effective January 1, 1987. The savings of both these provisions fall within function 050.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

JAMES BLUM
(For Rudolph G. Penner.)

1. Study of use by CHAMPUS of Medicare Prospective Payment System (section 204 of the Senate amendment)

Present law

Section 634 of the Department of Defense Authorization Act of 1985, Public Law 98-525, required the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Health and Human Services to study jointly the possible effects of the adoption for the CHAMPUS program of a prospective payment system for inpatient hospital services like the one used for medicare.

The report, with recommendations, was to be submitted to the Committees on Armed Services and Finance in the Senate, and the Committees on Armed Services and Ways and Means in the House of Representatives no later than February 28, 1985. Although the Department of Defense transmitted its portion of the study to the Department of Health and Human Services, the joint report has not yet been sent to Congress.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Health and Human Services would be required to study jointly the possible effects of the adoption for the CHAMPUS program of a prospective payment system for inpatient hospital services like the one use for medicare. The study would address: (1) the advisability and feasibility of requiring by law that a hospital participate in the CHAMPUS program as a condition of participating in medicare; and (2) the changes that might be expected, if such a system were adopted, in the CHAMPUS patient workload and the CHAMPUS aggregate payment levels to various segments of the provider community (e.g. hospitals and nursing homes).

The report with recommendations would be submitted to the Committees on Armed Service and Finance in the Senate and the Committees on Armed Services and Ways and Means in the House of Representatives no later than December 1, 1985.

Conference agreement

House recedes with an amendment. The date for submission of the report would be extended until June 30, 1986. The conferees expect the Secretaries to issue the report in a timely fashion.

2. Requirement of Medicare providers of Hospital services to participate in CHAMPUS and/or CHAMPVA programs. (section 205 of the Senate amendment)

Present law

Current law contains no requirement that medicare-participating hospitals accept beneficiaries of CHAMPUS or CHAMPVA. Current law imposes no requirement on such hospitals regarding acceptance of payment amounts under these programs as payment in full.

Section 931 of the Department of Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1984 included a provision authorizing CHAMPUS and CHAMPVA to utilize medicare reimbursement procedures in paying for care under these programs.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The bill would require a medicare-participating hospital to accept and also participate in the CHAMPUS and CHAMPVA programs and to accept payment made under both programs as payment in full.

The bill would be effective, generally on October 1, 1985.

Conference agreement

House recedes with an amendment. Admissions practices, payment methodologies and amounts would be prescribed in regulations jointly issued by the Secretary of Health and Human Services and the Secretaries of Defense and Transportation. It is the intent of the managers that the Secretary of Defense will identify hospitals which fail to meet this additional condition and convey that information to the Secretary of HHS for appropriate action.

The Secretary of HHS would be required to report to Congress periodically on the number of hospitals that have terminated or failed to renew an agreement as a reult of this additional requirement.

3. Requirement of Medicare providers to accept Veterans' Administration beneficiaries (section)

Present law

Current law does not require medicare-participating hospitals to accept Veteran Administration beneficiaries.

Further, the Administrator of the VA contracts individually with facilities to provide services to eligible veterans. The Office of Management and Budget is requiring the VA to cap reimbursement rates under these contracts at levels similar to rates established for medicare beneficiaries.

House bill

The bill would require medicare participating hospitals to accept Veterans' Administration (VA) beneficiaries on a basis similar to medicare and requires them to accept payment amounts determined under VA regulations as payment in full. The Secretary of HHS would be authorized to take corrective action or to terminate a provider's agreement for failure to comply.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement does not include the House bill.

TITLE III—HOUSING AND RELATED PROGRAMS

Section 3002 prohibits The Federal Financing Bank from purchasing notes or other obligations guaranteed under Section 108 of the Community Development Block Grant Program after June 30, 1986, and requires the Secretary of HUD by July 1, 1986, to take the actions necessary to provide for the financing by the private sector of loans guaranteed under Section 108.

Section 3003 authorizes $1.279 billion in fiscal year 1986 for public housing operating subsidies.

Section 3004—Provides that loans made for public and Indian housing, as well as modernization assistance, will be forgiven at the end of each fiscal year. It also gives direction for the use of the budget authority in the HUD Independent Appropriations Act of 1986, P.L. 99-160, which provides funds for new public housing development and modernization on the basis of long-term financing. As the legislative language the conferees adopted forgives the future public housing indebtedness and as this is tantamount to capital grant financing, the conferees intend that any budget authority that becomes available due to the change in financing will be rescinded. If this approach is used the conferees intend that any budget authority not needed to fund the 7000 additional public and Indian housing units or provide the level of modernization activity assumed by the Appropriations Committee for FY 86 and any other budget authority not needed for public housing development or modernization activities will be rescinded. Further, the conferees expect that the Congressional Budget Office take this into consideration in developing the baseline for FY 1987.

Section 3005—Rural Housing Authorization. Provides that the aggregate principal amount of loans that may be guaranteed or insured in fiscal year 1986 may not exceed $2,146,600,000,000 to be allocated as follows: Sec. 502 homeownership loans $1,209.6 million; Sec. 515 rental loans $900 million; Sec. 514 farmworker housing loans $19 million;

Sec. 524 site loans $1 million; and Sec. 504 repair loans $17 million.

Section 3006—Management of Insured and Guaranteed Loans. (a) Prohibits rural housing loans made directly or by private lenders and insured or guaranteed by the Farmers Home Administration from being sold to the Federal Financing Bank. (b) Provides that each insured or guaranteed loan contain an agreement by FmHA to pay the difference between the interest rate paid by the borrower and the full private market rate of interest. (c) Provides for protection of the borrowers' rights by requiring that the loan be assigned to the Secretary in the event of a substantial default but before foreclosure. The conferees wish to make clear that Congress intends that the FmHA follow the practices of private mortgage bankers and lenders with regard to defining substantial defaults and that the full forebearance provisions under existing law be extended to the borrower. (d) Provides that the rights that were available to FmHA borrowers prior to the enactment of this provision will continue to be available. (e) Further provides for a loss reserve account of not less than 5 percent of the loans sold to the public and makes other conforming changes in existing law.

The Conference Report also contains a provision to require that not later than 90 days after enactment, regulations be issued to implement the new loan sales approach including any measures that will facilitate the marketability of such loans in the private sector; and to assure that such loans will be competitive with other federally insured or guaranteed loans.

Section 3007—Extends the insuring authorities for all FHA programs through March 17, 1986.

Section 3008—Extends through March 17, 1986, the authority of the HUD Secretary to provide Section 312 rehabilitation loans.

Section 3009—Extends through March 17, 1986, the authority for all of housing related loan and grant programs of the Farmers Home Administration.

Section 3010—Extends through March 17, 1986, the flood insurance and crime and riot insurance programs.

Section 3011(a)—Grandfathers through March 17, 1986, the eligibility of certain metropolitan cities and urban counties as entitlement communities for purposes of the Community Development Block Grant program.

Section 3011(b)—Continues through March 17, 1986, the requirement that the interest rate on Section 202 loans for the elderly and handicapped not exceed 9¼ percent.

Section 3011(c)—Extends through March 17, 1986, the requirements of the Home Mortgage Disclosure Act of 1975.

Capital assets

House bill

No Provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment, in section 402(e), would amend section 304(c) of the Rail Passenger Service Act (RPSA) to permit Amtrak to restate its books and tax returns for years prior to fiscal year 1982 as if preferred stock had actually been issued in the years when it received certain capital grant funds. The amendment would remove an uncertainty as to the reporting of depreciation of the assets acquired with such capital gains.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment, in section 402(g), would amend section 306(f) of the RPSA to permit Amtrak to participate in the contract air program administered by the General Services Administration (GSA) in markets where service of Amtrak is competitive with that of air carriers. Under this program, GSA lists certain carriers as "preferred carriers" for federal employee travel. The program currently is restricted to air carriers. This amendment would allow Amtrak to increase revenues by approximately $1 million annually.

Report consolidation

House bill

No Provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment, in section 402(f)(3), would amend section 308(a) of the RPSA, which currently requires Amtrak to submit monthly reports to Congress on the fully allocated itemized revenues and expenses of each train operated. This section would require Amtrak to consolidate the monthly reports into an annual report due no later than February 15 of each year. The report would incorporate the following information for the preceding fiscal year: data on ridership; short-term avoidable profit or loss per passenger miles; revenue-to-cost ratio; revenues; subsidy requirements; and, on-time performance.

The provision also would require specification of significant operational problems which have been identified by Amtrak, together with proposals to resolve such problems.

House amendment to Senate amendment

The House amendment, in section 1585, contains a similar provision, whith two differences. The House amendment also would require data on passenger miles for the preceding fiscal year and would not require specification of significant operational problems.

The Senate amendment, in section 402(b), would amend section 103(3) of the RPSA to provide that Amtrak's authority to operate auto-ferry service extends to the transportation of used automobiles regardless of whether the automobiles are accompanied by their owners. Amtrak now operates Auto Train service between Virginia and Florida. Under the current law, it only can transport an automobile if the automobile's owner is also travelling on the train regardless of whether excess space is available. This amendment would permit Amtrak to generate additional revenues of approximately $1 million annually.

Route and service criteria—403(d) trains

House bill

No Provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment, in section 402(i)(1), would amend section 403(d) of the RPSA regarding Amtrak's operation of commuter trains. Under current law, Amtrak is required to operate these trains if they meet the current criterion for short-distance trains of 80 passenger miles per train mile (pm/tm), a criterion that would be eliminated by the Senate amendment. The Senate amendment provides that, effective October 1, 1986, if a train operated under this section does not meet the avoidable loss per passenger mile criterion for short-distance trains, Amtrak may discontinue the train unless the State or States involved enter into an agreement ensuring that the criterion would be met.

This amendment is made necessary by the fact that the current law contains a one-house legislative veto declared unconstitutional by the United States Supreme Court.

House amendment to Senate amendment

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the Senate amendment, with an amendment providing that the Congress may pass a joint resolution during the period which, if signed by the President (or, if vetoed, overridden by Congress), would disapprove such changes.

Route and service-criteria—short and long distance trains

House bill

No Provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment, in section 402(i)(3), (4) and (5), would amend sections 404(c) and (d) of the RPSA to eliminate, effective October 1, 1986, the passenger mile per train mile (pm/tm) criterion. Under current law, each Amtrak route is required to meet both the pm/tm and short-term avoidable loss criteria. If a route is projected not to meet these criteria, Amtrak must discontinue, modify or adjust the service over the route so that the criteria will be met. Under the amendment, Amtrak would continue to be required to review each of its routes to determine whether it meets the criterion on short-term avoidable loss per passenger mile.

Meaning of "discontinuance" for labor protection purposes

House bill

No Provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment, in section 402(n), would amend section 405(a) of RPSA to clarify that the term "dicontinuance" of rail service does not include any reduction in frequency, seasonal suspension or other service modification that does not result in the elimination of all service on a route.

House amendment to Senate amendment

No Provision.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the Senate amendment, with an amendment. Under the conference substitute, the term "discontinuance" shall not include any adjustment in frequency the effect of which is a temporary suspension of service, unless such suspension causes a reduction of passenger train operations on a particular route to a frequency of less than three round trips per week at any time during any calendar year. In approving this substitute, the conferees understand that the term "adjustment in frequency" includes "seasonal suspension."

Northeast Corridor cost dispute decisions

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment, in section 402(t), would repeal section 1163 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 and would amend section 402(a) of the RPSA to modify the criteria to be used by the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) in future determinations of the compensation to be paid Amtrak for the use of the Northeast Corridor by freight railroads (primarily Conrail) and various commuter authorities.

House amendment to Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the Senate amendment with four amendments: (1) providing that the modified criteria to be used in ICC determinations shall not apply to the commuter authorities, which shall continue to be governed by the statutory standard adopted in 1981; (2) specifying that the ICC shall make future determinations within 120 days; (3) clarifying that the conference substitute shall not preclude parties from independently entering into agreements dealing with the compensation to be paid to Amtrak by the freight carriers; and, (4) clarifying that the conference substitute shall not be construed to alter the long-standing Congressional policy against cross-subsidization among intercity, commuter, and rail freight services. That is, the conferees do not intend that intercity and freight, intercity and commuter, or freight and commuter services cross-subsidize one another.

TITLE IV

SUBTITLE B

Reduction in Highway Authorizations

House bill

This section reduces fiscal year 1986 highway authorizations a total of $800 million. The reduction is made by reducing authorizations for the Interstate 4R program $350 million, the Primary program $150 million, and the Bridge Replacement and Rehabilitation program $300 million, which reduces authorizations for these three programs to their fiscal year 1985 levels.

The Secretary of Transportation is directed to reduce fiscal year 1986 apportionments for these three programs on the first day following enactment of this bill. In the event that any state has obligated previously authorized funds for these three programs in excess of the reduced amounts contained in this bill, the Secretary of Transportation is directed to subtract the excess from the fiscal year 1987 apportionments made to the affected states for these three program on October 1, 1986.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference substitute

House provision, except fiscal year 1986 authorizations would be reduced a total of $400 million—$175 million for the Interstate 4R program, $75 million for the Primary program, and $150 million for the Bridge Replacement and Rehabilitation program.

Obligation limitations

House bill

Establishes obligation ceilings for affected highway and highway safety construction programs of $13.25 billion in fiscal year 1986, $13.80 billion in fiscal year 1987 and $14.40 billion in fiscal year 1988.

Programs exempted from obligation ceilings include obligations for Emergency Relief under section 125, Minimum Allocation under section 157, Bridges on Federal Dams under section 320, all of Title 23, United States Code, Acceleration of Bridge Projects under section 147 of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1978, Woodrow Wilson Bridge Improvements under section 9 of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1981, Pennsylvania and Illinois demonstration projects authorized in sections 131(b) and 131(j) of the Surface Transportation Act of 1982, National Visitor Center improvements authorized under section 118 of the National Visitors Center Facilities Act of 1968, and Zilwaukee Bridge project construction required as the result of construction failure.

This section further specifies that no obligation controls be placed upon ongoing emergency projects carried out under section 125 of Title 23, United States Code or section 147 of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1978.

Senate amendment

Establishes obligation ceilings for affected highway and highway safety construction programs of $12.75 billion in fiscal year 1986, $13.25 billion in fiscal year 1987, and $13.80 billion in fiscal year 1988.

Programs exempted from obligation ceilings include obligations for Emergency Relief under section 125, Minimum Allocation under section 157, Bridges on Federal Dams under section 320, all of Title 23, United States Code, Acceleration of Bridge Projects under section 147 of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1978, Woodrow Wilson Bridge Improvements under section 9 of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1981, and National Visitor Center Improvements under section 118 of the National Visitors Center Facilities Act of 1968.

Conference substitute

Establishes obligation ceilings for affected highway and highway safety construction programs of $13.125 billion for fiscal year 1986, $13.525 billion for fiscal year 1987, and $14.1 billion for fiscal year 1988.

Programs exempted from obligation ceilings are the same as the House bill, except the Zilwaukee Bridge project is not exempted.

The redundant House provision specifying that no obligation controls be placed upon ongoing emergency projects carried out under section 125 of Title 23, United States Code, or section 147 of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1978 is deleted.

Distribution of obligation authority

House bill

Directs the Secretary of Transportation to distribute obligation authority to the states for each of the fiscal years 1986, 1987, and 1988 based 95 percent upon the ratio that each state's apportionments or allocations for that year bears to the total nationwide apportionments or allocations made for that year and 5 percent based upon the ratio that each state's available unobligated balance of funds previously apportioned or allocated bears to the nationwide total of such available unobligated apportionments or allocations. These latter determinations shall be made based upon each state's unobligated balance of Federal-aid highway and highway safety funds previously apportioned or allocated which remain available for obligation on the last day of the preceding fiscal year which are not subject to lapse on such last day of that fiscal year.

This section limits first quarter obligations for each state to obligation of no more than 35 percent of its total obligation authority for the year and the nationwide total obligations for the first quarter to no more than 25 percent of the total for each of fiscal years 1986, 1987, and 1988.

This section also directs the Secretary of Transportation to provide in fiscal years 1986, 1987, and 1988 all states sufficient obligation authority to prevent lapses of funds previously authorized to be apportioned or allocated, notwithstanding the previous provisions of this section, except for those instances where a state indicates its intent to lapse funds apportioned under section 104(b)(5)(A) of Title 23, United States Code.

The Secretary of Transportation is further directed after August 1 of fiscal years 1986, 1987, and 1988 to revise the distribution of obligation authority to the states if one or more states will not obligate the obligation authority amounts previously distributed to them under this section. Such redistribution shall be made giving priority to states having large unobligated balances of funds apportioned to them under section 104 of Title 23, United Stated Code and to states experiencing substantial proportional reductions in apportionments or allocations as the result of statutory changes made by the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 and the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1981.

The Secretary may not distribute amounts authorized for administrative expenses and Federal lands highways programs.

Section 157(b) of Title 23, United States Code, is amended to make clear that Minimum Allocation funds, which are exempt from obligation ceilings, are not considered in computing the distribution of obligation authority to the states.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill except that obligation authority for each of fiscal years 1986, 1987, and 1988 is distributed to the states based strictly upon the ratio that each state's apportionments or allocations bear to the nationwide total apportionments and allocation for that fiscal year. Senate bill does not contain House bill comforming amendment to Section 157(b) regarding Minimum Allocation funds.

Conference substitute

Same as House bill except that obligation authority for each of fiscal years 1986, 1987, and 1988 is distributed to the states based strictly upon the ratio that each state's apportionments or allocations bear to the nationwide total apportionments and allocations for that fiscal year.

Emergency relief

House bill

No comparable provision

Senate amendment

This section increases the maximum amount which the Secretary may expend in any State for any single natural disaster or catastrophic failure under the provision of section 125, Emergency Relief, of Title 23, United States Code, from $30 million to $55 million for any disasters or failures occurring in calendar year 1985.

Conference substitute

Senate provision.

National minimum drinking age

House bill

No comparable provision.

Senate amendment

This section amends section 158 of Title 23, United States Code, to direct the Secretary of Transportation to permanently withhold, beginning in fiscal year 1989, ten percent of highway funds apportioned each year under sections 104(b)(1), 104(b)(2), 104(b)(5), and 104(b)(6) of this Title from any state which does not have in effect an acceptable permanent twenty-one year old minimum drinking age law in effect on the first day of fiscal year 1989.

Fiscal year 1987 and 1988 funds withheld pursuant to existing law may be restored to any state enacting a suitable minimum twenty-one year old drinking law as long as the normal lapsing period for such funds has not expired. Funds withheld under this section for fiscal year 1989 and subsequent fiscal years may not be restored.

Conference substitute

Similar to the Senate provision, except section 158 is further amended by directing that a state law containing a grandfather clause allowing those persons under 21 who had the right to drink under the state's previous law is to be considered as meeting the requirements of section 158, if such state law is enacted no later than October 1, 1986, or the tenth day following the last day that the state's legislature first meets after the date of enactment, whichever date is later. Any 21 year old minimum drinking age law containing a grandfather clause enacted after the later of those two dates will not be considered in compliance with section 158, and a state enacting such a law after such date will be sanctioned in accordance with section 158, as amended. In addition, it is also intended that a state failing to enact such a law prior to October 1, 1986, because its legislature has not met or finished its next session shall be subject to the 5 percent penalty on October 1, 1986, subject to reimbursement upon enactment of its grandfather law during such session.

Any state enacting an acceptable minimum drinking age law after September 30, 1988, will be entitled to reimbursed for only those funds withheld in fiscal year 1987 and 1988 and for no subsequent years. After FY 1988, funds withheld for succeeding fiscal years from any state that has not yet enacted a minimum drinking age law in conformance with section 158 will be considered to have permanently lapsed, except that Interstate funds would be reallocated by the Secretary under section 118(b) of Title 23, United States Code. Funds withheld from a state and remaining available for reimbursement will be allocated to such state the day after a minimum drinking age law is enacted in accordance with section 158. Reimbursable funds include only those funds withheld from apportionment in fiscal years 1987 and 1988 that, under current law, have not lapsed and remain available for apportionment. Upon apportionment, such funds shall be available for obligation for a period not to exceed the period such funds are normally available when apportioned.

The Conference Substitute also includes conforming amendments to make technical corrections in the minimum drinking age provision of P.L. 98-363.

Ohio River bridge reprogramming

House bill

This section amends section 147 of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1978 to permit the use of previously set aside and authorized funds, excess to the needs of the two bridge projects designated as the result of the 1978 Act, to carry out three bridge replacement projects over the Ohio River. Such projects will use state-of-the-art design and construction technology to provide the most cost-effective projects which result in minimum future maintenance and rehabilitation costs.

The Secretary is instructed to allocate sufficient funds from the available excess to carry out two Ohio River highway bridge replacement projects between Newport, Kentucky, and Cincinnati, Ohio, and between Covington, Kentucky, and Cincinnati, Ohio, before allocating any remaining available funds for the Ohio River highway bridge replacement project between Maysville, Kentucky, and Aberdeen, Ohio.

Funds allocated under this section are to be made available for obligation in the same manner and extent as if such funds were made available under chapter 1 of Title 23, United States Code except that such funds are made available until expended and are not subject to any obligation limitations.

The Federal share of such projects shall be 90 percent as specified under subsection (a) of section 147 of the 1978 Federal-Aid Highway Act.

In order to maximize the dissemination of knowledge gained from the use of advanced technology and other effects on these projects, the Secretary is directed to submit reports on these projects, together with recommendations for applying the results to other projects, and where appropriate, changes in law necessary to incorporate the beneficial results into other projects. Such reports are to be submitted one year, six years, 11 years, and 21 years after completion of the three bridge replacement projects authorized under this section.

Senate amendment

No comparable provision.

Conference substitute

Same as the House provision with technical changes, except that no more than $65 million of section 147 funds shall be available to carry out the three bridge replacement projects over the Ohio River. The balance of section 147 funds shall be redistributed to all states pursuant to section 144(e) of Title 23, United States Code.

The Conferees want to emphasize four points with respect to this provision. First, the term "replace" is used in a functional sense, meaning that the new bridge will be a substitute for the old bridge on the particular route in question. The Conferees want to make it clear that the bridges being replaced do not necessarily have to be taken down.

Second, it is the intent and expectation of the Conferees that the Secretary assure that sufficient funds are set aside from the $65 million to fully construct the bridges described in subparagraphs (2)(A) and (2)(B). In the unlikely event that the $65 million is not sufficient to fully construct the bridges described in subparagraphs (2)(A) and (2)(B), the state would have to use other Federal and state funds available to it to make up the difference. Once these projects proceed to the point where the Secretary can make a determination and certify in writing that sufficient funds have been set aside from the $65 million to complete these projects, then the Secretary is to allocate remaining funds to the project described in subparagraph (2)(C). Of course, if the $65 million is not sufficient to complete the projects described in subparagraphs (2)(A) and (2)(B), then no funds could be allocated to the project described in paragraph (2)(C). Since the projects described in paragraphs (2)(A) and (2)(B) have priority over the project described in subparagraph (2)(C), the Conferees fully recognize that the amounts allocated to the bridge described in subparagraph (2)(C) will not be sufficient to fully construct it. The state will have to use other Federal and state funds available to it to make up the difference.

Third, the Conferees have agreed to this provision with the understanding that no additional special Federal funding will be provided for any of these bridges. In that regard, it is the intent and expectation of the Conferees that the Secretary require, as a condition precedent to making an allocation from the $65 million of each project, the state to agree in writing that it will provide the necessary funds to complete such project in the event that the amount allocated under this provision is not sufficient. In other words, before receiving any funds under this provision, the state must agree to bear full responsibility for completing the project. With respect to the projects described in subparagraphs (2)(A) and (2)(B), this agreement would cover at least the following situations: (1) the state must agree to complete the projects in the event that the $65 million turns out to be insufficient; and (2) the state must agree to cover any cost overruns which might occur subsequent to the Secretary certifying that sufficient funds have been set aside to complete the project (this latter situation should be quite remote given the intent of the Conferees that the Secretary not make the required certification until he or she has a high degree of assurance as to the final cost of the project). With respect to the project described in subparagraph (2)(C), the agreement would set forth the funding arrangements that have been made by the state to assure completion of the project given the limited Federal contribution under this provision.

And fourth, the Conferees want to note the extraordinary nature of the situation that led to the need for this provision. The excess funds being reprogrammed by this provision were the result of changed circumstances, overly conservative estimates of inflation, and cost savings achieved by the Section 147 demonstration program, a one-time special program to demonstrate methods to accelerate construction of bridge projects. Thus, this provison should not in any way be viewed as a precedent with respect to cost savings that might be achieved on bridge projects funded under the normal Federal-aid programs.

TITLE V—CORPORATION FOR PUBLIC BROADCASTING AND FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Section 5001—Public Broadcasting authorization

House bill

The House bill contained no provision.

Senate bill

The Senate bill authorized the Corporation for Public Broadcasting (CPB) at $200 million for FY 1987, $214 million for FY 1988, $238 million for FY 1989 and $254 million for FY 1990. The Senate bill also authorized the Public Telecommunications Facilities Program (PTFP) at $24 million for FY 1986, $28 million for FY 1987 and $32 million for FY 1988, in addition to certain provisions related thereto.

Conference agreement

The Conference adopts the Senate provision.

Section 5001(c)(1) of the conference report authorizes appropriations for the operations of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting (CPB) at $200 million for fiscal year 1987, $214 million for fiscal year 1988, $238 million for fiscal year 1989, and $254 million for fiscal year 1990. Section 5001(a) of the conference report authorizes appropriations for the Public Telecommunications Facilities Program (PTFP) at $24 million for fiscal year 1986, $28 million for fiscal year 1987, and $32 million for fiscal year 1988.

The CPB is a private, nonprofit corporation organized under the laws of the District of Columbia. CPB acts as the public trustee for funds appropriated pursuant to the Public Broadcasting Act of 1967.

The PTFP provides grants for broadcast equipment and other telecommunications "hardware." This program is administered by the National Telecommunications and Information Administration (NTIA) of the Department of Commerce.

The 1981 reauthorization legislation sharply curtailed federal support for public broadcasting in view of overall federal budget constraints. For CPB, Congress authorized $130 million for each of fiscal years 1984, 1985, and 1986. For PTFP, Congress authorized $20 million for fiscal year 1982, $15 million for fiscal year 1983, and $12 million for fiscal year 1984. At the same time, Congress sought to stimulate alternatives to federal funding and allowed public broadcasting stations greater freedom to engage in commercial ventures for support. The 1981 authorization also established the Temporary Commission on Alternative Financing (TCAF) to explore financing alternative for public broadcasting.

It was hoped at the time that new sources of revenue, provided for in part by that Act, could be generated to compensate for decreasing federal funds, thereby preventing a deterioration in service. However, since that time, despite major efforts by the Public Broadcasting System, revenue has not been forthcoming in sufficient amounts to compensate for the drastic cuts. As a result, many stations have had to reduce the amount of locally produced programming, overall broadcast hours, and staff. Moreover, important cultural and educational series are being forced out of production. For example, the series "Nature: Living Wild" and "Latenight America" have been canceled due to lack of funding. Production of new shows for "Great Performances", "Frontline" and "Playhouse" has been scaled back 20 percent. Production for "Wonderworks" and "Reading Rainbow", both popular and critically acclaimed programs for children, has been cut 30 percent and 33 percent respectively. Two-thirds of all "Sesame Street" programs are now reruns of previous segments, and for the first time, no new American-produced series aired on public television last Fall.

A low level of funding for the PTPF program threatens to undermine severely the goal of assuring the availability of quality public broadcasting facilities which are vitally necessary to assure the public receives adequate access to public broadcast programming. Currently, approximately 30 percent of the country does not receive public radio signals, and approximately 10 percent of the public still does not receive a local public television signal. Many large geographic areas, particularly in the West, cannot receive a public television signal. There is no local service yet in Montana, 15 percent of Missourians do not receive public television signals, and similar problems exist in Nevada, Arizona, Alaska and Hawaii. In other areas there are particular problems where mountains and buildings interfere with signals, and equipment is needed to correct this situation in order to serve the entire community. Finally, a severe problem is developing with respect to preservation and maintenance of existing transmission and other broadcasting equipment, and it has become very clear that updating and replacing equipment and parts requires an ongoing commitment of resources if quality public broadcasting signals are going to be available to the public.

In 1983, in an attempt to prevent further decline in the system, Congress passed a supplemental authorization bill which increased the authorizations for CPB to $145 million for fiscal year 1984, $153 million for fiscal year 1985, and $162 million for fiscal year 1986 (Public Law 98-214).

In 1984, the Congress passed S. 2436, and the House companion legislation, H.R. 5541. Based upon hearings on these bills and upon the findings of the TCAF, it was clear that alternative financing mechanisms had not developed to the point where they could replace or substantially supplement federal support for public broadcasting. These bills therefore provided authorization levels that were substantially higher than those provided by the 1981 legislation. For CPB, S. 2436 and H.R. 5541 authorized $238 million for fiscal year 1987, $253 million for fiscal year 1988, and $270 million for fiscal year 1989. For PTFP, they authorized $50 million for fiscal year 1985, $53 million for fiscal year 1986, and $56 million for fiscal year 1987. On August 29, 1984, the President vetoed S. 2436.

As a result of this veto, on September 20, 1984, the Senate passed new authorizing legislation, S. 607. For CPB, S. 607 authorized $200 million for fiscal year 1987, $225 million for fiscal year 1988, and $250 million for fiscal year 1989. For PTFP, it authorized $25 million for fiscal year 1985, $35 million for fiscal year 1986, and $40 million for fiscal year 1987. S. 607 passed the House on October 5, 1984, but was pocket vetoed by the President on October 22, 1984.

The Conference report retains strong support for our nation's public broadcasting system, recognizing that this system still needs adequate federal funding. At the same time, the conferees are aware of federal budget constraints, and have endeavored to strike an appropriate balance in this legislation. The authorization levels in the conference agreement are well below those in S. 2436 and S. 607, and the conferees believe these levels provide the minimum amount that will allow CPB and PTFP to fulfill adequately their important functions.

The funding levels contained in this measure are below the Administration's own 1985 recommendations for CPB. However, the conferees expressly reject the Administration proposal to abolish the PTFP program which is a program critically necessary to meeting the goal that public broadcasting service is available to all Americans.

In addition to reauthorizing CPB and PTFP, Section 5001(b) of the conference report amends section 393 of the 1934 Act by striking subsection (c), which provides that not less than 75 percent of program funds shall be available for new public telecommunication facilities that will reach unserved areas. By striking this 75 percent allocation guideline, the Conference Committee intends that the administrators of the program have flexibility to use a greater proportion of funds for replacement or rebuilding of equipment in existing public telecommunications facilities. The release of additional funds for this purpose will help prevent service to the public from being disrupted by failures or breakdowns in aging equipment.

In approving grants, the conferees intend that NTIA shall continue to follow the criteria set forth in section 393(b) of the 1934 Act, which remain unchanged by this legislation.

Section 5001(c)(2) of the conference report also amends section 396(k)(3)(a)(i)(II) of the Communications Act of 1934 to strike the words "research, training, technical assistance, engineering, instructional support, payment of interest on indebtedness." This amendment is intended to provide CPB with greater flexibility to use the funds allocated to it to meet the evolving needs of public broadcasting. In providing CPB with this flexibility, the Committee does not intend to preclude CPB from providing funds for research, training, technical assistance, engineering, instructional support, and payment of interest on indebtedness. Capital costs relating to telecommunications satellites, the payment of programming royalties and other fees, and the costs of interconnection facilities remain specified obligations of CPB under this subclause.

Finally, Section 5001(c)(3) of the conference reports amends section 396(k) of the 1934 Act to strike paragraph (8). Paragraph (8) currently requires that public broadcasting entities, if they file income tax returns declaring unrelated business income from commercial activities permitted under the 1934 Act, must refund to CPB an amount equal to the unrelated business income tax paid.

TCAF reviewed the possibility that additional sources of income could be generated by public broadcasters entering auxiliary commercial ventures. For example, some public television stations use spare production capacity to produce programs for cable television, others lease the satellite uplink for commercial purposes. Some public radio stations have signed agreements to lease excess satellite distribution capacity for commercial paging ventures. However, TCAF included that profits from these ventures are extremely small, and prospects for them to generate meaningful income in the forseeable future appear dim.

TCAF also concluded, that Section 396(k)(8) of the Public Broadcasting Act of 1981 is a barrier to increased entrepreneurial activities by public broadcasters. The Conference Committee agrees that the additional generation of revenues should be encouraged and adopts TCAF's recommendation to repeal the unrelated business income tax provision.

Section 5002—Federal Communications Commission

House bill

The House bill contained a cost of regulation fee schedule and certain provisions related thereto.

Senate bill

The Senate bill authorized the Federal Communications Commission at $98.1 million for FY 1986, and $97.6 million for FY 1987 with certain related provisions. The Senate bill also contained a cost of regulation fee schedule and related fee provisions.

Conference agreement

The conference adopts the Senate provision.

FCC Travel

Subsection (b) of the Conference Report amends section 4(g)(2) of the 1934 Act (47 U.S.C. 154(g)(2)) to extend the FCC's travel reimbursement program through fiscal year 1987. New subparagraph (E) is added to section 4(g)(2) to authorize the Commission to obligate travel reimbursement funds that are received after the close of a fiscal year.

Annual Report

Subsection (c) of the Conference Report changes the due date on the FCC annual report to Congress required by section 5(g) of the Communications Act. Because of circumstances beyond its control, the FCC has been unable to submit the report by January 31, as current law provides. By prescribing March 31 as the new due date, the conferees have provided more than ample time for timely submission. The conferees expect that the report will be submitted as soon after January 31 as is possible. In no case, should the report be submitted later than March 31.

Charges for operation

Section 5002(e) of the Conference Report creates a new Section 8 of the Communications Act of 1934 which requires the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) to charge fees for the regulatory services it provides to many of the communications entities within its jurisdiction. These fees have been recommended by the FCC and are based on the Commission's estimates of the cost of providing such services. The fee schedule will not subject any additional communications entities to Commission regulation.

The Conferees believe that fees based on the cost of regulation principle are an appropriate mechanism by which a portion of the FCC's regulatory expenses may be recaptured.

Non-commercial radio and TV stations will not be subject to any of the fees listed in this schedule. In addition, no provision in the fee schedule applies to petitions to deny the grant of a license to regulated communications entities filed by non-licensees.

The fee schedule shall be implemented not later than 360 days after the date of enactment of this section.

Section (8)(b) of the Communications Act requires the Commission to review these fees every 2 years, and to increase or decrease the fees to reflect changes in the Consumer Price Index (CPI). Adjustments will apply to all fees, but an individual fee shall not be adjusted until the net change in the CPI amounts to at least $5 for fees under $100, or 5 percent of fees of $100 or more. Adjusted fees will be rounded upward to the next $5 increment. The Commission shall notify Congress of any adjustments no later than 90 days before such adjustment takes effect. Adjustments to fees pursuant to this procedure shall not be subject to judicial review, because these changes merely are ministerial, nondiscretionary acts.

Subsection (c) requires the Commission to develop penalty charges that will be assessed for late payment of fees. These penalties will equal 25 percent of the late payment of fees. The Commission is authorized to dismiss applications or other filings to penalize late payment of charges.

Subsection (d) provides that the fees shall not apply to specified radio services: Local government, police, fire, highway maintenance, forestry-conservation, public safety, and special emergency radio. In addition, the charges established shall not apply to governmental entities licensed in other services. The Commission is authorized to waive or defer fee payments in specific instances, where good cause is shown and where waiver or deferment of fees would promote the public interest. The Conferees intend that the Commission's discretion to waive or defer fees shall be narrowly defined.

Subsection (e) provides that the fees collected by the Commission under this section will be deposited in the general fund of the U.S. Treasury. Although the fees collected will reimburse the United States for amounts appropriated for use by the Commission in carrying out its functions, nothing in this section shall be interpreted to affect the need for full funding of the Commission's activities through the normal appropriations process.

Subsection (f) directs the Commission to prescribe rules and regulations to implement this fee schedule.

The Conference Report requires the Commission to collect fees for the following regulatory services:
